Tonight's Episode: There Ain't No 'Justice'

It was a dark day when Kenner discontinued its Batman: Total Justice line.

'Tsee, despite being editor of Toyfare and keeping my ear to the ground for the entire action figure industry (no small task), the toys that I collect and hold dear to my heart are the small but precious offerings devoted to DC Comics superheroes. As a lifelong DC fan, I wouldn't want it any other way.

And I'm not just talking the latest Batman and Superman lines. I mean everybody—from Mega's World's Greatest Super-Heroes! to Kenner's Super Powers to the late, lamented Total Justice. If it's out there—and reasonably affordable—chances are I'll add it to my modest collection. I had similar hopes for Total Justice, a line which had the potential to become the DC toy line. Despero? Huntress?? Black Lightning??? When Kenner added these low-profile characters to T.J., I very nearly fainted. But now it's gone, which leaves DC fans like me a little sadder.

Take a look at marketing done right: Marvel Comics wanted a means to produce action figures based on its superheroes, so it literally bought a toy company—the fledgling Toy Biz—and gave them one of the most lucrative master toy licenses ever. Today there are over 200 different Toy Biz offerings covering the entire Marvel Universe. From the high-profile X-Men to the more obscure Inhumans, Toy Biz has produced just about every major and minor Marvel character.

But DC... "sigh" What I wouldn't do for an Azrael with light-up retractable bundi doggers... or a Manhunter with his Hauser pistol and throwing stars... or even the "new" energy-powered Superman, just to cement his place in history.

For now, I'm going to have to be content with the occasional Harley Quinn or Parallax, characters piggy-backed on the humps of cash cows like Batman.

With one of the richest pantheons in comics history, DC Comics properties are ripe fodder for action figures. Let's look at the facts: JLA is one of the hottest comic series today, and judging by our "Wish List" fan mail, collectors would sell their grandmothers for a new fully articulated Green Lantern or Wonder Woman. The Legion of Super-Heroes sports a roster of heroes, villains, supporting characters and aliens large enough to lick any Star Wars line. And don't get me started on the mail we receive for a Kingdom Come line, based on last year's hottest mini-series starring aging versions of DC heroes.

This is my appeal, and I know that there are scores of action figure collectors that share this sentiment: We want our DC characters. And whether it involves writing to the marketing department at DC Comics, or flooding master toy licenser Kenner with requests, the only way to fill our shelves with the characters we want—no, deserve—is to let our voices be heard.

Shop on any "Fractal Techgear" or action accessories you want, Kenner. Recommend any character you want, DC. I'll buy 'em, and so will others. Just realize that you're both sitting on a goldmine.

FanFare

MORE ANGRY FANS

As we wait fan mail in response to the first monthly issue of ToyFare (this column being written several weeks before ToyFare #1 sees print), we'll be tackling a few hot topics that arose from the pages of the Wizard: ToyFare Spring Special. The most controversial issue: a letter from a fella by the name of Nick Williams who wrote in commenting how he buys extras of rare figures to sell on the secondary market at a higher price and, if toy collectors don't like it, they can "Get off [their] asses and just try and beat me to 'em!" Needless to say, fans were a little irked. Fer instance....

Dear FanFare,

After reading the spring ToyFare Special, we were really upset when we read the letter by Nick Williams, who wrote, "Now if I go through [hell] and I hunt down some rare figures, you'd better believe that I am going to buy as many as I can. I'm going to take those extra figures to a toy show somewhere and I'm going to earn my money back." Look, if this guy likes to collect figures, that's fine. But when he goes to a toy show and sells them, he screws the rest of us! If Nick wants to earn his money back, GET A JOB! Some of us don't appreciate money-hungry punks who buy collectibles only for profit. And the next time that someone like "Nick Williams from IL" tells real collectors to "get up off of our asses and beat him to it" we'll have to say he can kiss our asses! We hope he chokes on his cash! Maybe he can use that extra money to buy himself a heart and soul!

Fed up,

Mike Scardillo &
Ralph Rehor
Flushing, NY

But wait, there's more...

ToyFare,

This is in answer to the "Greedy Toy Monger" [Nick Williams].

Here's the scenario: I manage a

Toys R Us and see lots of rare and short-packed figures. No matter what time you get your skinny little butt to my store, I still have first crack at all these toys. And wouldn't you be the first to cry and whine if I decided to buy ALL these for myself by opening all the crates before they hit the floor? I don't because I'm a human being who believes in fair share. I know your type, hovering over in the action figure aisle, taking all the figures before the kids can get them, or forcing them to buy the toys from you at seven times the price. Get a life! The only thing you're earning is your true title of "Greedy Toy Monger" and you're not supporting your hobby. The only thing you're supporting is yourself.

Chris Orlando
North Centereach, NY

And that was just a taste of what the majority of the Nick Williams mail had to offer, though not everyone was grabbing pitchforks and torches to burn Castle Williams and the monster within to the ground.

ToyFare Staff/Readers,

Nick Williams—BRAVO! I would bet my talking Beetlejuice that if 99% of the people complaining that they couldn't find a scarce toy walked into 10 orange-carded Jawas, they would walk out of the store having spent $60. They're not fooling anyone, I've even done it a few times.

Thanks for the laughs!

Sandi Tyche
San Marcos, CA

Dear ToyFare,

Reading your Spring Edition "FanFare," I got a little ticked off. I'm tired of these whining wimps who complain about not being able to find what they want. I work in the toy department of a major retailer and I have people come in at 5:00 a.m. (when I get to work) just to find their favorite or newest toys and figures. Almost all of these are just collectors like myself, not toy mongers or comic store owners. Finding your favorite figures and accessories is half the fun of collecting.

Susan Davison Quitman, LA

True, there is nothing like the thrill of the hunt. To quote that Vulcan soothsayer Mr. Spock: "You may find that having is not so pleasing a thing after all as wanting. It is not logical...but it is often true." But hey, it does suck knowing you have to wait an extra couple of weeks to add the newest cool toy to your collection because somebody just cleaned the shelves off and is pocketing some cash by selling 'em at a comic convention or in a comic shop.

Dear ToyFare,

I heard that Toy Biz had a manga-like line in development called "Children of the Atom" with Sentinel, Colossus, Magneto, Storm, Wolverine and Omega Red, as well as a Capcom Marvel Superheroes line (also in a manga-like style) featuring Spider-Man, Juggernaut, Psylocke, Hulk, Blackheart and Wolverine. You know anything about this?

Matt Stearns
Cedar Rapids, Iowa

According to Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon, Children of the Atom, based on the hit Capcom arcade game, was one of those toy lines that never quite made the cut. "We decided to do 3 3/4-inch figures that would come permanently attached to action bases," says Falcon. "They had really specific action features—a button would activate the action for that character in a 'try-me' package designed like an upright arcade game. But Children of the Atom never really got the reaction it needed to at Toy Fair and never made it as a line. Too bad, though, the sculpts came out beautifully." So there you have it.

ToyFare,

Is there anywhere to purchase loose figures?

Rory Anglin
Picayune, MS

Stay away from loose figures. They just want you for your money and when your wallet runs dry, they'll dump you for the next collector who wanders into their sad, desperate lives and leave you with a broken heart. But hey, if you wanna chance it, we know of two cool places that sell loose toys:

Amok Time Toys
16 Wolcott Road
Levittown, NY 11756
(516) 520-0975

Action Toys
P.O. Box 102
Holtsville, NY 11742
(516) 736-8697

Dear FanFare,

My thoughts on action figures:

- Larger production runs of female figures is a must.
  - Articulation all the way!
  - Limit buying toys to two of each kind (one for you and one for a friend).
  - Standardize toy size by genre (comic book, sci-fi, etc.)
  - Anyone who can make (a) Homemade Hero(es) is very cool.
  - Take your toys out of the boxes and play with them, otherwise they're useless.
- An eternal fan,

Joe Hecht
Jefferson, WI

And so Joe Hecht came down from the mountain, the will of the Lord inscribed upon the stone tablets clutched within his grasp.

Dear Editorial Staff,

I am troubled by a new trend: limited exclusive editions. I have no problem with exclusive toys, just limited edition exclusives.

As a collector, my goal is to keep my collection complete. I don't really care about every little variant—I just want the characters.

I was lucky enough to get a Molten Man from your last offer. But now, I have to wonder, will I get a Kitty Pryde? Who knows?

It's a gamble, but it ought not to be.

I would hope that you would consider making your toy offer an exclusive, but not limited so that speculators and scalpers buy up the stock, forcing the enthusiasts to either dish out big bucks or leave holes in our collections. Can you simply offer one per customer? Or at least make as many figures as your print run? I know that this won't eliminate the scalper or the speculator, but it will help us not have to decide between letting the collection go or paying $50 for a figure.

Now, I don't care if you sell to hoarders and speculators, but I don't want those people to be my only resort for these figures. We collectors buy your magazine, but the speculators and scalpers benefit from the limited figures. I hope this will be taken seriously. This limited-edition mania could eventually drive many people out of the hobby.

Bart Jarmusch
Lexington, KY

Yeah, a lot of people were pretty steamed about the Molten Man offer from the first Wizard ToyFare Special. Demand far exceeded our estimated supply and a healthy percentage of fans had their checks returned. After that learning experience, we upped our production runs on subsequent figures to match total orders received on Molten Man in the hopes that we won't run into that same problem again. Here's hopin'.

Dear ToyFare,

In "Star Wars," how come they don't float in space?

Jonathan Duncan
Address Withheld by Request

"They" used to float in space, but then Han, Luke and Chewie started wearing briefs instead of boxers and now "they're" snugly held in place.

Dear ToyFare,

While it is good to see toy collecting is alive and well, it also bothers me to see where it is heading. The dealers I see at conventions these days are the same ones who were hawking comics a few years back. Speculating ran rampant and I think that the same thing is going to happen again with toys. Cards and comics as a hobby

Survey Says...

TOYFARE'S AOL POLL

In the spirit of fantasy, Toyfare posed the "perfect world" scenario to our online pals concerning what DC Comics heroes they'd most like to see in action figure form, now that Kenner's Batman: Total Justice line has been discontinued. We removed Wonder Woman from the running, however—even in fantasyland, that property's so tied up in red tape you'll see Bat-Mite in Batman 5 before you...wait a minute, that actually wouldn't surprise us...

If Kenner's Total Justice line returned, which DC hero would you most like to see as an action figure?

- a) Lobo
- b) "New" Superman
- c) Impulse
- d) Captain Marvel (Shazam! ya idjits!)
- e) Ambush Bug
- f) Nightwing
- g) Other (tell us who!)

Not a bad spread! Superman's latest incarnation garnered a full quarter of the votes, but Lobo, Impulse and Nightwing all made strong showings in the final tally. Even little Billy Batson didn't do too poorly, considering the stiff competition facing him. Poor Ambush Bug couldn't catch a break, though.

As usual, we had our fair share of write-in votes. Heroes from both the old Teen Titans and Legion of Super-Heroes comprised most of the write-ins.

Once the numbers are crunched and the data's compiled, what's it all mean? Quite frankly, there's still great demand for characters from corners of the DC Universe other than Gotham City and Metropolis. Listen up, Kenner! Oh, and we also learned that everyone still hates Ambush Bug. "Sigh" have been destroyed by the speculators and it won't be long until everyone jumps on the action figure bandwagon. This trend will probably continue until the hobby implodes in a few years and something else comes along.

HEY! more reader mail...

Vu H. Nguyen
Address Withheld by Request

The most important lesson collectors/fans could have learned from 1993's glut—where everybody was buying up every variant cover/special edition under the sun—is this: Only buy what you like. If you dig the newest Spider-Man assortment from Toy Biz EXCEPT for one figure you think is weak, DON'T buy it. Collect McFarlane toys but are frustrated by the endless variants/repaints/exclusives? DON'T buy them. Think the Firestar figure offered in this issue of Toyfare is lame? DON'T buy it. Rule No. 1: Collect what you like. Anything else is a waste of your money and will eventually make you a disillusioned, bitter ex-toy collector.

Toyfare Editorial,

Charlee Flatt, the guy who made the cool X-Men and Spidey dolls for the first two Toyfare Special covers, rules! How can fans of his work write to him?

Jason Turner
Brett@colint.com

Charlee, who also designed the Alex Trebek, Dr. Doom, Red Skull and Mr. Mind figures from last month's "Twisted Mego Theatre: Supervillain Jeopardy," can be reached by writing to:

Charlee Flatt
c/o Toyfare
151 Wells Ave.
Congers NY 10920

Hey Toyfare,

I was reading the letters section of the second Toyfare Special and I found the letter I wrote printed there. I was happy. I was ecstatic! I was jumping for joy!

Then I read my letter just for the heck of it and my mood quickly changed to anger. My letter was edited to death! Why is this? Are you at Toyfare scared of what I had to say?

Tell me the reason for destroying the basic concept of my letter! I must know!

Sincerely annoyed,
Mike Ferrarella
Maspeth, NY

Here's how it works:

- 1) We get in thousands of letters.
- 2) We go through them ALL, putting aside those that are thought-provoking, ask solid questions or are otherwise entertaining.
- 3) We edit the letters down to their strongest point, removing all ancillary text to fit as many letters as possible and then the Toyfare Editors take turns answering letters. Now go relax and have some pie.

FanFare,

Is there an "Age of Apocalypse" Gambit?
Chris Hunter
Lucerne Valley, CA

Yup, though it took a while for him to see the light of day. Originally part of the X-Men: Age of Apocalypse (AOA) assortment, Gambit was bumped when the line was shaved down from 6 figures to 5 (a move to make the line more cost-effective. Less figures in a line, less risk if the line doesn't do so well). While that line didn't continue, the Gambit figure was already sculpted, so rather than let the toy go to waste, he was released as part of a Toys R Us Famous Couples two-pack along with an AOA Rogue (a re-decoed White Queen).

Toyfare,

I have a few questions:

1) Did Toy Biz ever produce DC Comics Super Heroes and Marvel Super Heroes at the same time?

2) If Toy Biz kept the DC license, could they have produced Amalgam figures?

Gabriel Chavarria
Address Withheld by Request

1) You betcha. Back in late 1989/early 1990 Toy Biz produced the short-lived DC Comics Super Heroes line (a follow-up to its Batman movie figures) alongside its Marvel Super Heroes line. When Kenner got the DC license back, the Biz kept chugging along and made its mark with a little mutant property called X-Men.

2) Probably, but since they didn't, don't hold your breath.

Dear ToyFare,

Having once worked part-time at a comic shop I had no control as to what price the owner would put on a figure. I used to hear it all the time from customers about how expensive the figures were, yet they were still willing to shell out the dough. If you were a little kid that came into the store when I was working then I'd refuse to sell you a toy because you wouldn't know any better. If you were at the age where you could drive yourself to the nearest toy store but you refused to be patient then it's your fault. If you're willing to spend that kind of money for a figure, then quit complaining. Did the shop owner twist your arm to buy the figure? If a dealer knows he can sell it for that price, naturally he'll put a high price on it.

Scott Taylor
Royal Oak, MI

Ya gets what ya pays for.

Dear ToyFare,

When I was looking at the back of the box of one of my toys, I noticed it was made in Canada. Is there any difference in value since it wasn't made in America?

Keith Maddison
gijk.maddison@ns.sympatico.ca

Hmm...could be. As a rule, action figures in foreign packaging are typically worth less than their American counterparts. The exception would be the Canadian-only Star Wars Power of the Force Yak-Face figure, worth beaucoup bucks in the U.S. or the green variant current POTF C-3PO issued in Japan, also valued highly. We recommend buying American. It's good for the economy!

Dear ToyFare type people,

If the Lady Death action figure is made of plastic, does that mean her boobs are real now?

TOY BIZ'S #1 GRUDGE MATCH: STREET FIGHTER VS. X-MEN!

It's the action figure matchups collectors have been waiting to see.

Can Wolverine actually whup Akuma's butt? Does Ryu have what it takes dust Magneto? Fans can now find out for themselves. Beginning this winter, Toy Biz will release the first of two assortments of Street Fighter vs. X-Men action figures, based on the hit Capcom arcade game of the same name.

As Toy Biz Product Manager Damon Nee explained, Capcom was anxious to see quality Street Fighter figures on the market, and the huge success of the video game gave the company a perfect opportunity. "Capcom saw the video game as their chance to mesh their popular characters with the X-Men, and ultimately create a unique line of figures with appeal to both Street Fighter and X-Men fans," said Nee. "And it worked. We've made something really cool here."

The initial two Toy Biz assortments will consist of twin packs made up of one X-Men figure and one Street Fighter figure. The first assortment will consist of: Ryu (with a clip-on fireball) vs. Magneto (with a clip-on magnetic sphere); Wolverine (with slashing action) vs. Akuma (with punching action); Ken (with cloth outfit) vs. Sabretooth (with snarl and swipe action); and Cyclops (with leather jacket and clip-on optic blast) vs. M. Bison (with double-punching action). The twin packs of the first assortment will be hitting shelves just in time for Christmas and will retail for approximately $9.99.

The second assortment, shipping in late spring of 1998, will include Apocalypse, Chun Li, Cammy, Storm, Rogue, Juggernaut, Zangief and Charlie. While the team-ups haven't been set yet, Nee said that one set he is definitely planning is Rogue vs. Cammy.

Also, Nee revealed that each package will feature dedicated packaging pulled directly from the video game by Capcom, stand-up backgrounds for figure display, and each package will contain video game tips and secrets, so it'll pay to throw speculating to the wind and open the package. ■ Matthew Brady

ACTION FIGURES INVADE SAN DIEGO

Forget comic books, bring on the action figures!

Even though comics outnumbered toys 10 to one at the recent San Diego Comicon, fans lined up in droves to see some of the latest sci-fi and superhero offerings from Kenner and Playmates.

One big draw was the latest offerings in Kenner's Star Wars: Power of the Force 3 3/4-inch line, including the first-ever Princess Leia in Ewok Celebration Garb and an all-new Luke Skywalker in Bespin Gear, complete with a removable hand! Mos Eisley bad guy Dr. Evazan made his debut in the brand-new Cantina Showdown 3-pack, which also included newly sculpted versions of Ben Kenobi and Ponda Baba (Walrusman). Fans also got their first glimpse at the Kenner website exclusive B'omarr Monk. Look for ordering info at <http://starwars.hasbro.com/> at the end of August.

Additionally, Kenner unveiled its new 7 1/2-inch assortment devoted to "Alien Resurrection," this fall's fourth installment in the mega-popular extraterrestrial monster saga begun with 1979's "Alien," once again starring Sigourney Weaver as Ripley. Joining the Ripley action figure are Call (the first-ever Winona Ryder action figure!), as well as the dynamically sculpted and decoed Warrior Alien, Aqua Alien and Battle Scarred Alien.

And shifting franchises, Kenner showed off its latest Batman: Legend of the Dark Knight offerings (see page 20 for a look), plus the all-new Mad Hatter figure from the ongoing animated Batman: D.U.O. Force collection.

Playmates also drew huge crowds with its Star Trek-themed booth featuring forthcoming offerings in all its Trek-based lines sure to excite fans. In its ongoing standard 5-inch line, Playmates unveiled such classic "Star Trek" characters as Trelayne (from "The Squire of Gothos"), the Andorian (from "The Journey to Babel") and the "Mirror, Mirror" Spock. Look for all future 5-inch Trek figures to feature smaller heads and hands that are more in scale with the size of the figures' bodies, in addition to Playmates' already photo-accurate likenesses.

And not to be outdone by its smaller cousins, the "Mirror, Mirror" alternate universe Captain Kirk will be included in Playmates' Ultra Trek 6-inch assortment—figures which arrive with impressive plexi-boxes that allow fans to keep their toys mint in package and play with them. ■ Scott Beatty

'EVIL' TAKES UP RESIDENCE AT TOY BIZ

It's dark. It's creepy. And now, it has its own action figure line. Based on the top-selling Capcom game for the Sony PlayStation, Resident Evil action figures from Toy Biz will make their debut early next year.

According to Product Manager Jesse Falcon, Toy Biz's development team was rarin' to create the figures. "We all had the game and were huge fans of it before we got the license to make the toys," Falcon said. "Resident Evil" is a game that's practically a horror movie. When Capcom approached us about making figures, we were more than happy to work with them."

While the Resident Evil line is still in early pre-development, Falcon does have a rough idea of where the first assortment will go and what characters it will include. "There will be four 5-inch figures in the basic assortment," Falcon said, "including Jill and Chris, the two characters gamers can play in 'Resident Evil,' and a couple of the creatures from the game. There will also be one 8-inch character in the line—Tyrant, the video game's main villain. Since he's bigger than the humans in the game, he'll fit to scale with the others. Trust me, the entire line will be very cool. An excellent addition for fans of 'Resident Evil.'" ■ Matthew Brady

"Whoa, this thing was loaded! Sorry," Capcom's Resident Evil.

NUKLEAR POWER!

The toy license for the video game smash "Duke Nukem" now rests with ReSaurus Company Inc., best known for their Lost World "interactive" hand puppets.

And the small Columbus, Ohio, toy company couldn't be happier. "This is a really big deal," said Doug Sapp, ReSaurus president. "We're losing our minds."

Sapp said ReSaurus won the Duke Nukem license despite interest in the property from Trendmasters and McFarlane Toys. "We want to show that Todd's not the only guy doing action figures and doing them right," Sapp said of McFarlane Toys head honcho Todd McFarlane. "We respect him very much—he's the only one doing [toys] correctly."

Two incarnations of a Duke Nukem action figure will exist, Sapp said. The standard edition, which ReSaurus plans to have in stores by early October, will include Duke with his standard roster of weapons from the game and will have an initial production run of 200,000.

Additionally, a limited Internet edition of 50,000 figures can be reserved online 30 to 40 days prior to the standard figure's shipping, Sapp said. The Internet edition will include all the standard-edition accessories plus the video game's Freeze Thrower weapon. Additionally, Sapp said, the Internet edition will contain a CD-ROM from "Nukem" creator 3D Realms containing the game plus several demos.

The Internet edition will also ship one per case with the standard figure, Sapp said. The standard edition will retail for $8.99, with the Internet version planned to cost $10.99 to $12.99. According to Sapp, playsets and vehicles are currently in development, to see production next year. ■ Torn Root

BLADE TOYS TAP A NEW VEIN

Stake this, Marvel fans!

You didn't think the first movie based on a Marvel Comics character to come along in years wouldn't get the action figure treatment, did you? We didn't think so. Look for Toy Biz's Blade action figures to stick it to vampires everywhere in early 1998.

Based on the upcoming New Line Cinema big-screen "Blade" movie starring Wesley Snipes as the mutant vampire who hunts his own kind, Blade toys are sure to take a bite out of collectors' pockets. With Kris Kristofferson as Blade's mentor, Whisper, and Stephen Dorff as the bad guy, Deacon Frost, Blade action figures will hit shelves in a four-figure assortment featuring some of Toy Biz's best sculpting to date. The initial assortment will include a standard Blade armed with a sword, a Blade figure featuring the costume Snipes wears at the end of the film, Whisper (with, naturally, a booster blood pack) and villain Deacon Frost.

"These figures are hyper-detailed," said Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon. "They're a new look for us. We're taking Marvel characters and bringing them to real life. We've done 'cartoony'-style figures. We've done comic book-style figures. Now we're doing hyper-realistic, authentic to the actors' likenesses. These are some of the best action figures we've ever produced."

Look for Blade figures to hit store shelves in February 1998, to coincide with the nationwide release of the movie. ■ Matthew Brady

PATHFINDER FINDS LIFE IN TOYS

There's life on Mars.

At least that's what Mattel, makers of Hot Wheels toy cars, is finding out. The company's hit a veritable goldmine with their new Mars Rover Action Pack Set, a detailed replica of the spacecraft that made history over the July Fourth weekend when it landed on the surface of Mars and beamed back high-resolution images of the Martian landscape.

The set actually contains three separate vehicles in different scales: the Pathfinder spacecraft with a miniature lander, a large-scale lander with detachable Sojourner rover, and a large Rover with six rubber wheels and movable antenna.

With public interest in space exploration at an amazing high, there's been a huge demand for the Action Pack across the country. The toy was an instant sellout and Mattel has fielded numerous phone calls from buyers enthralled by the Sojourner's adventures.

The best news is that a portion of the pack's $5 price tag will go to the Jet Propulsion Laboratory to fund future missions and promote interest in the U.S. Space Program.

TOY OF THE MONTH

AUGUST'S coolest action figure... THE DEWBACK!

Who: The Dewback, scaly green beast of burden for the Empire, used to track down those runaway droids C-3PO and R2-D2, on the desert planet Tatooine. This giant reptile was also one of the new computer-generated beasts featured prominently in last February's "Star Wars: The Special Edition" (available this month on home video and laserdisc).

What: As part of Kenner's new Beast Assortment of Star Wars: Power of the Force toys, the brand new Dewback comes with a resculpted Sandtrooper (featuring gray shoulder pad) that can ride on its back. The first wave of Beasts also includes Jabba the Hutt with Han Solo and the "Special Edition"-debuted Ronto with Jawa.

Where: Available at all toy and comic book/hobby stores.

When: August

Why: Two words: Star Wars. You know this sucker's gonna be hot, just 'cause anything remotely inspired by "Star Wars" sends toy collectors into a tizzy. But what puts the Dewback over the top is Kenner's superb sculpting job: With its clawed feet and that unforgettable toothy sneer, this thing is all set to sniff out any droids in your Star Wars collection. Not only that, but it's also 10 times better than Kenner's original Dewback from nearly two decades ago. The Sandtrooper, hefting that big momma of a cattle prod, comes with jointed knees so he can actually ride on the Dewback, instead of sliding into its back through a spring-loaded trap door. ■ The ToyFare Staff

WEBSITE OF THE MONTH

ACTION GIRL'S GUIDE TO FEMALE FIGURES

<http://users.aol.com/sarahdyer/index.htm>

The action figure market's traditionally been a swampland of testosterone, aimed dead square at the boys' market with heavily muscled manly-man toys.

Leave it to Sarah Dyer, force behind Slave Labor Graphics' Action Girl, to engineer an online estrogen oasis. Action Girl's Guide to Female Figures is an exhaustive compilation of nearly every female character released in action figure form in the United States, and lots more available only overseas.

Necessity, as usual, was the mother of invention in AGGFF's case. Dyer had begun making a list of female action figures for her own use. "No published list was accurate," she says. Soon, she began photocopying the list for friends. The website was a natural progression soon thereafter; in July 1995, Dyer's list made its Web debut.

Along with extensive lists of female figures here and abroad, AGGFF offers links, reviews and non-articulated stuff like PVCs and fast-food promotions. A staple of the site is Dyer's "Action Girl Seal of Approval," stamped next to the more outstanding entries. How does a female figure earn Dyer's blessing? "First of all, it has to be a good toy," Dyer says. Great role models matter little, she says, if the toy's a hunk of crap.

Sometimes, though, even garbage can win Dyer's heart. "I recently got the entire Celestra line," she says, "which was a lame attempt to cash in on both She-Ra and Transformers...it's horrible, but great at the same time."

Another recent addition to Dyer's personal Hall of Fame is Barbarocious from the Play 'Em company's Warriors of Virtue line. "I think their toys are just brilliant," she says.

Hats off, Sarah! You da man. Er...you know what we mean. ■ Tom Root

COMPANY UPDATES

ANTARCTIC PRESS

The Murder She Wrote Gold Limited Edition figures are on the way! After production and shipping delays, partly due to Hong Kong's return to Chinese rule, orders are now being fulfilled. Antarctic Vice President Joe Davis reported that his planned 700-fig. line production run was bumped up to 1,000 after the initial order was submitted.

ERTL

Modelers aboy! Ertl has released a series of Star Trek and Star Wars model kits, with retail prices projected at $18-$24. The latest Star Trek model, out in September, is the "Thrust Converter" S.S.S. Intergalactic A.C.S. L781-2. The Star Wars model shipping in September is Darth Vader's TIE Fighter.

GALOOB

Galoob has altered its contract to produce both Star Trek and Babylon 5 toys to expire. Babylon 5's deal ended last December, while Galoob's partnership with Star Trek ended April 30. Nancy Goldblum, Galoob product manager, said the contracts died of natural causes—they had simply reached the end of their respective terms, and Galoob decided not to renew them. "We had a very successful run" with both lines, Goldblum said.

MATTEL

Be on the lookout for a number of Mattel exclusive offers in coming months. Quaker Oats is currently offering an exclusive Batman figure from Batman's feature film, with rock-chewing action and Pole and Pole figures. The 1997 Avon Holiday catalog will offer two exclusive Star Wars Simulacra figures. These in metallic brown deco and Babylon 5 in metallic purple deco.

McFARLANE TOYS

The new BFS figures are already a big hit. But production problems have forced McFarlane Toys to rethink one of the line's accessories. The individual letter stands were close to coming to produce and have been replaced with mini-figs.

cas of rock band member's sale album. This running change was implemented at the halfway point of production, so there should be roughly equal numbers of each variant. McFarlane stresses that this move was not done to make one more collectible than the other, but to make sure the figures get to stores as soon as possible. Variants have also been popping up already in the Spawn movie line. There are three versions of the Spawn figure: the regular version, an unmasked "hamburger head" version, and an "attack" version with the body from the deluxe based Spawn with a new hamburger head sculpt. Todd McFarlane's Monsters has been an overwhelming success, so the odds of seeing another set of the Spawn gun's take on classic movie monsters in early '98 are very good.

▼ MOORE ACTION COLLECTIBLES

A chromium Lady Death is the first of many M.A.C. exclusives. Visible for two other exclusives (made from either metallic or glow-in-the-dark materials) for the first wave of Chisel Comics action figures. Speaking of Chisel figures, Lady Deanna, the final figure of the first wave, is completed. Look for all five figures, including Evil Ernie, Lady Death and Purgatori, to ship to comic book specialty shops in October, just in time for Halloween.

Lady Deanna

PLAYMATES

Playmates' Zorro line has been pushed back until December to split the difference between the other Zorro entertainment properties; the animated TV series will premiere in September, while the Antonio Banderas feature film will debut in March '98. Indiana Jones guard Artemus "Pony" Hordway's puppet sidekick Lil' Penny will reach talk consumers from toy store shelves in a matter of weeks! A 9-inch LP arrives in September, available in a basketball uniform or party outfit (including smoking jacket and planel), while a 14-inch talking incarnation ships in October. "The Secret Service couldn't guard me!"

SKYBOLT TOYS

A black capo "Convention Edition" of the Millennium action figure was sold exclusively at the Chicago Comiccon over the July 4th weekend. Only 500 action figures were produced, selling out by 11 a.m. on the second day of the convention (July 5th). So count yourself very lucky if you were there to get one.

TRENDMASTERS

Trendmasters has planned a autumn toy launch for Casper the Friendly Ghost, with other Harvey Entertainment properties likely to follow. Two series of figures will ship to coincide with "Casper: The Spirited Beginning," a live-action direct-to-video movie.

The Cheerformers series will feature the transformable Reptilian Casper, Trusman Stinky, Plumber Fatso and Fireman Stretch. Nice n' Seek Friends will feature five different household objects—a chair, a garbage can, a vacuum cleaner, a TV and a treasure chest—all of which cancel a ghostly pet.

A direct-mail promotion will offer the new Casper video along with an exclusive Casper figure, a new character from the movie.

TOY BIZ

Look for Kull the Conqueror figures to hit store shelves later this summer just in time for the release of the Universal feature film starring Kevin Sorbo ("Heracles: The Legendary Journeys"). The assortment will be made up of three figures: Kull the Conqueror, Kull the King and the villain Tologara. The Biz's Kull figures will come with removable armor, while all figures will have different swords, axes and other battle gear.

PLAYMATES HUNTS DOWN TUROK LICENSE

Turok: Dinosaur Hunter toys are on the way, and not until late 1998 at the earliest.

But when you're a descendent of a centuries-old line of mystical warriors, a year doesn't seem that long to wait.

When it comes to hard-and-fast details on the upcoming Turok line from Playmates, "It's still way, way too early," stressed Acclaim President Fabian Nicieza, also writer of the company's Turok comic series. Nicieza has a very definite idea of what he wants from a Turok line. "I'm not all that far removed from grabbing a couple of action figures and slamming them together—as my wife will attest," Nicieza laughed.

"I want them to look cool," Nicieza said. "I didn't want to have a toy line with 'Arctic Power Batman.' You can stretch a character's rubber band so far until you don't even recognize the character anymore. We can have brand extension without watering down the brand itself." Turoks from all time periods could make their way into the line, Nicieza assured, without offering variations on the same character.

Although still in preliminary planning stages, Nicieza said the initial Turok line will most likely include Joshua, the present-day Turok; the 1800s Turok; several Dinosoids (dinosaurs evolved from humans); the evil Bionosaurs; and possibly the Campaigner. ■ Tom Root

TOYFARE TAKES A GANDER AT THE HOTTEST NEW RELEASES

LEGENDS OF THE DARK KNIGHT: SERIES THREE

Gotham City ain't what it used to be.

In Batman: Legends of the Dark Knight, Kenner introduced a highly detailed, 7-inch Batman action figure series set in a nightmarish, parallel world—a far cry from the retro cartoony look popularized in the company's successful, ongoing Animated Batman assortments. And for the designers and sculptors working on Legends, that's just fine.

"The Legends line is giving Batman a look that's cooler and edgier than anything that's ever been done before," says Keith Laakko, Batman team leader at Kenner. "The figures all have great styling and a great aesthetic that make for some great collectible toys."

After a strong first assortment that included a mondo-sized "Elseworlds" Bane and the scariest Scarecrow figure ever, in addition to the standard Batman variations, Kenner followed up with Bat-Attack Batman, Glacier-Shield Batman, Panther Prowl Catwoman and Laughing Gas Joker. After this impressive lineup, Kenner's third Legends assortment, set for release in time for Christmas, is poised to top all that.

"We're working off the same general theme here: neural suit technology, a suit and cape that act almost as a part of Batman and the other characters," says Laakko. "What you'll see in this wave is that there is much more of an integration between the suit and the character. As we go on, we'll continue to push that concept even further."

Legends' third assortment will incorporate this "neural suit technology" in dynamic new versions of the Dynamic Duo—Underwater Assault Batman and Jungle Range Robin—as well as a new-look Penguin and a monstrous Man-Bat with a 15-inch wingspan. "Man-Bat's huge," Laakko says. "We had some trouble figuring out how to get him into the package. He's got great styling and a great edgy look."

And that's where Aaron Archer, lead designer on the Legends line, comes in. Archer, whose creative energies launched Kenner's recent Batman: Total Justice line devoted to DC Comics characters, is the man responsible for Batman: LOTDK's twisted looks and dynamic sculpting, including giving Man-Bat a look very much in line with Batman penciler Kelley Jones' recent interpretation of the anti-hero. A longtime comic book fan, Archer uses both classic character designs as well as his own unique artistic perspective. "Aaron does draw on the Batman mythos, but every aspect of character design is his original concept which he brings to life," Laakko says. "He takes what he knows about the character, combines that with who he sees the character to be, and then adds his own twist. He's trying to give them their own unique and individual aspects, so the figures aren't just carbon copies of something else that's already been done."

Laakko attributes the success of the Legends line to two main factors: first and foremost, there's Batman's universal appeal. "Anyone can be Batman," Laakko says. "Where you can't be a mutant or come from Krypton, it is in the realm of possibility to get a bunch of cool gadgets and fight crime, and that's really cool."

Secondly, Laakko feels that Legends offers a little more than your average action figure. "These figures are much more detailed and have a much better paint deco, giving them a great visual appeal," Laakko says. "It's like putting a piece of art up on your wall. Also, just from the size angle, it looks great in your hand. There's a lot of toy there."

Laakko and Archer already have plans for 1998's Legends of the Dark Knight releases. "So far, we've got Robin and some other characters in the line, but what about the other heroes that interact with Batman?" Laakko teases, referring to such Bat-family mainstays as Nightwing and the Huntress. "Other heroes would be a very cool thing. We've also got a great library of Batman villains that we still haven't brought into the Legends line yet, so there are tons of characters out there for us to use. What's coming up in 1998 will be some of the coolest stuff out there." TF

A GANDER AT THE HOTTEST NEW RELEASES

MADMAN

It's the snappiest action figure you'll ever see!

Madman fans are in for 8-inches of fully poseable madness, courtesy of Graphitti Designs.

"I'm biased, of course," says Mike Allred, creator of Snap City's snappiest hero. "If this new Madman action figure even came close to what I dreamed, I was going to be thrilled. But this thing is four stars all the way."

Allred's signature creation is part of the fledgling line of action figures from Graphitti Designs, makers of all sorts of popular comic-related collectibles including T-shirts, statues and magnets. Madman is joined by two of comics creator Matt Wagner's popular creations: the Hunter Rose incarnation of the warrior Grendel and the reluctant superhero Mage.

According to Bob Chapman, president of Graphitti, this initial line of action figures could just be the tip of the iceberg for these three properties, and possibly for other independent comic book characters as well. "We're trying to make sure we can get the action figures we want before we go any further. If we achieve our goals with these three as far as quality and articulation go, we're going to definitely explore the characters further. These properties all have a depth that is waiting to be utilized. Also, once we feel comfortable with our knowledge, we plan on hitting some of the other better-known creator-owned characters out there. We're looking for properties with a very loyal audience."

The Madman, Grendel and Mage figures, which have been in the works for over half a year, will be in a whopping 8-inch scale. "I've always liked the Mego-sized figures from the '70s," says Allred, whose popular character also has a penchant for '70s-era disc guns. "I want something you can get a good grip on and slam around and burrow into dirt piles." Like the classic Mego figures, Madman will feature a high level of articulation, with joints at the neck, shoulders, biceps, elbows, waist, hips and knees.

For Allred, this level of poseability will ensure the Madman figure not only looks great, but is built for hours and hours of play. "I have the same feeling about toys as I do about comics," Allred says. "Don't keep 'em in the little packaging, play with the darn things! These toys kick butt! You want to play with Madman and throw him around the room and have him crash-land in the corner."

Just like his comic book incarnation, the Madman figure brandishes all sorts of wonky accessories. Though plans are still being finalized, the figure could possibly include a criss-crossing chest harness to hold a rocket pack or laser cannon, a waist holster with two guns and possibly an interchangeable head, molded with a flight helmet and removable goggles. But what about his trusty yo-yo? "We haven't forgotten about that," Chapman says with a laugh. "We want to do other versions of Madman down the road and the yo-yo would be the perfect accessory."

Chapman is confident that Graphitti will be able to attract attention by producing a quality product, but he doesn't totally rule out issuing variant figures. "I'll consider doing them, but I don't want to play a lot of games. We may do variants from time to time as an incentive but I'm not a big fan of that manipulative sort of marketing. I don't want to wallow in it, I want to do it with an air of class."

Madman and other Graphitti figures will be packaged in a traditional blister card on an authentic full-color card. At press time, an exact price has not been set, but Chapman hopes to keep them under $15. "The worst-case scenario would be $14.95, but we believe $12.95 is going to be a very reasonable price to work for."

Whatever the price ends up being, don't start bugging your local comic book store until the end of the year. The earliest you could see Graphitti's first wave of action figures is Christmas 1997, but a more realistic estimation is the middle of spring 1998.

Allred, for one, might not be able to wait that long. "I'm so excited, not only for Madman, but for the entire line as well. If this is a success, I think this is going to be the classiest, coolest toy line ever." TF

ToyFare Assistant Editor Tom Palmer is pretty snappy himself. Plus, he's articulated, too!

TOY BIZ'S MARVEL ACTION FIGURES THAT DIDN'T MAKE THE CUT By Tom Root

You can never own them.

They're the unproduced, never-distributed action figure mutants, monsters and supervillains that, for whatever reason—assortment reduction, line cancellation or dwindling interest—were never seen by fans and collectors.

Until now.

Toy Biz, best known for their various action figure lines based on Marvel Comics superheroes, recently gave ToyFare a sampling of some of the more mysterious, obscure and downright bizarre action figures that, until now, only a select handful have seen.

HUSK

First Appearance: X-Force #32

What's Her Deal? Paige Guthrie, younger sister of the X-Men's Cannonball, left her old Kentucky home to join Generation X in hopes of gaining control over her mutant powers. Mostly, though, she just wants to grow up to be an X-Man like her big brother Sam. Paige can shuck her outer skin to reveal a new form underneath, the limits of which have yet to be revealed. Even Paige doesn't know the full range of her abilities.

One application of her powers: leaving discarded skins all over the place, much to the disgust of her fellow students at Generation X's Massachusetts Academy.

The Scoop: Now, here's an action feature you don't see every day: "She was going to be able to literally rip off her skin," Falcon says of the planned Husk figure. "There was going to be a metallic rock layer underneath, since she's constantly transmutating into different forms [in the comic series]." With fellow mutie freaks M and Synch (who were never sculpted), Husk would have rounded out the heroes portion of the third Generation X assortment, which was placed on hold once the live-action syndicated "Generation X" series stalled. Falcon says the fate of the third line rests on whether the property makes it to TV again, in either live or animated form.

"If [the series] should come back," Falcon says, "then the possibility of activating the line again is pretty good. We might not use the exact same [prototypes] or sculptors, though." If the third Generation X series does indeed see production in conjunction with a live-action TV show, the figures might very well be based on the likenesses of the actors and actresses involved, Falcon reveals.

HEMINGWAY

First Appearance: Generation X #5

What's His Deal? Hemingway is big. And mean. During his initial comics appearance, this behemoth left a trail of bodies in his wake. Even taking a header down an elevator shaft at the hands of the Generation X kids didn't slow him down much. Hemingway reappeared a few more times with the other villainous members of Gene Nation, and his disposition didn't seem to improve one iota. Neither did his intelligence. For all his mutated, hulking size, you'd think his gray matter would've increased. No such luck.

The Scoop: Slated for the late Generation X line, Hemingway would have been among three Gene Nation foes (along with an Ever/Sack two-pack) to top off the unseen third assortment.

Falcon reveals that Hemingway's big sledgehammer arm was jointed in three places. "You could wind it up and his arm would spin around like a big drill when you pressed a button on his back," he says. His other arm wasn't much friendlier; it sported a nasty-lookin' retractable claw for mutant impalin' action.

EVER

First Appearance: Uncanny X-Men #325

What's His Deal? Ever's comics appearances have been limited. He showed up with the other Gene Nation club members for a panel or two in their early appearances and made little impact. But his powers were finally showcased in Uncanny X-Men #339, when he popped up with the new, nasty-persona Havok to try and bump off J. Jonah Jameson aboard a Concorde en route to London. At Ever's disposal is a knack for projecting "psiolographic projections" and to teleport people with his psionic abilities, according to X-Men scribe Scott Lobdell. His awesome psionic powers are linked to his body's makeup, which seems to be mostly brain matter through and through. Ewww...

The Scoop: "Ever was going to be cast in translucent material," Falcon says, which would have emphasized the character's brainy form. While the figure wouldn't have had any action feature, Ever would have been packaged with a sidekick, Sack, for the Generation X line. And...hey, what do you know? Sack's up next!

SACK

First Appearance: Uncanny X-Men #324

What's His Deal? A disgusting little jelly-covered walkin', talkin' skeleton, Sack can absorb into a human host and control 'em from the inside. Of course, once he's done with his meat-puppet joyride, the hapless victim doesn't often survive. Sack's mushy-gooshy form also comes in handy when someone pops a cap in his slimy ass, as NYPD Det. Charlotte Jones did during his debut—he simply absorbs the ammo and keeps on grinnin'.

The Scoop: The Sack production process would've involved something called "insert molding," Falcon reveals. Sack's skeleton would've been molded, then injected into the slushy interior part of the figure and topped off with a layer of hard transparent plastic. Sack was slated to have been packaged in the Generation X line with pile-o'-brains Ever as an oozy li'l sidekick.

Exposed brains and ooze...what kid wouldn't have snapped up that combination?

CONTROLLER 13

First Appearance: X-Men 2099 #4

What's His Deal? "I take moments of transcendent emotional intensity from otherwise wasted lives—and create work appreciated by a select audience," Controller 13 tells his captives in his premiere appearance. In other words, he tortures unlucky saps and distills their pain and suffering onto compact discs, then sells 'em. What a freako.

The Scoop: The planned Controller 13 figure was simply a victim of being lame. He was the "sixth man out" when Toy Biz's five-figure X-Men 2099 assortment debuted, but he never made it into the second series, either. "He was a very minor bad guy," Falcon says. "There were characters much cooler we could do." The Controller 13 action figure, however, was very cool, with accessory restraints, a torture visor and an eyeball sidekick which clipped onto his back. Falcon says the Controllers played only a minor role in the X-Men 2099 universe at first, and by the time they were developed further, the X-Men 2099 comic series (and with it, the toys) had been canceled.

CARETAKER

First Appearance: Ghost Rider (3rd series) #28

What's His Deal? This shadowy gravedigger (is there any other kind?) is an ally of Ghost Rider. He's the wise, all-knowing keeper of the cemeteries the ol' Flaming Skull frequents, and dispenses cryptic advice when he's not...well...digging holes. Plus he rides a mean hog (the motorcycle kind, not the livestock kind), as do most of the heroes in the Ghost Rider continuum.

The Scoop: "He was planned for the third assortment of Ghost Rider figures, but the line got killed," Falcon says. Caretaker would have been ball-jointed in his legs so he could ride the series' motorcycles, plus there might have been more accessories included with the figure (other than his removable hat and action...uh...shovel), but these items were never sculpted. "He was a pivotal character in the comics, and they were trying to work him into the [i>"Ghost Rider" animated] show, but the series never happened," Falcon says. Which means this peachy-keen bit player will never hit the toy racks.

GAUNTLET

First Appearance (as Barrage): X-Factor #65

What's His Deal? Well, he ain't even Gauntlet, first of all. He's Barrage; Gauntlet's a different guy. The two characters debuted in X-Factor as members of the Riders of the Storm, Apocalypse's cronies. Barrage's blastin' cannon arms are nifty, but how does he eat with those things? And why'd Toy Biz swap his name tag with Gauntlet's?

The Scoop: Apparently the Barrage name was already in use with another comics company, so rather than sweat it, Toy Biz simply grabbed the nearest handy handle. Not that it mattered in the end—Gauntlet never made it to stores under any name, nor will he ever. "Gauntlet was planned for the third big year of X-Men, the '93 assortment with Sabretooth, Cyclops, Professor X and the Brood," Falcon explains. While the figure was in limbo, Falcon adds, "the [toy] industry changed. Aesthetically, he was two to three years behind."

The character was underutilized in the comics anyway, and his old-school sculpting spelled doom for Gauntlet. For the record, the figure would've shot projectiles from his hands, but heck, it's all academic at this point.

However, the Gauntlet prototype recently went on the auction block at Sotheby's, with an asking price of a couple thousand dollars. So hey, he's not completely unattainable. Although perhaps he should be.

TRAPSTER

First Appearance: (as Paste Pot Pete) Strange Tales #104, (as the Trapster) Fantastic Four #38

What's His Deal? One of the Marvel Universe's most enduring punching bags, the Trapster just made a big-time comeback in the pages of Sensational Spider-Man, showing brand-new confidence and skill, even winning a bout with Spidey. Not bad for a guy whose modus operandi consists of shooting glue at people. The Trapster used to run around with the nom d'évil Paste Pot Pete, which won him about as much respect from his peers as Chris Farley gets from Academy Award voters. The Trapster also fancies himself something of a genius when it comes to capturing his prey—but mostly he's always been a hapless schmuck.

The Scoop: Falcon says the Trapster would've come with a trap-filled mechanized base à la Medusa, Psycho Man and the Wizard in the Fantastic Four's fourth assortment. Why didn't Pete make the cut? Try assortment downsizing, plain and simple. The seven-figure assortments Toy Biz produced during the first several waves of X-Men figures were cut to six when the Iron Man and Fantastic Four lines debuted in 1994, and later to five. The Trapster was planned as the sixth figure in the fourth FF assortment, but when the assortment shrank, ol' Trappy got the shaft. TF

As a child, ToyFare Copy Editor Tom Root liked to eat paste. These days he sticks mostly to glue guns and fun-tack.

MAKE YOUR OWN "BIG SHOT" CONTEST

Who the...?!

Yeah, these two guys here look like crap, but they're supposed to; they're the prototypes. Before a figure is made it's mocked up, hand-painted and shown around to see what improvements can be made to it. As you can see with Molten Man, we changed his pants from the tattered look to the briefs. Madrox, the offer in Toyfare #4, well, Madrox will look a lot different than he looks here. But the best part? They're each one-of-a-kind. And they could be yours. Read on!

We need your help. See, it gets a little tough sometimes coming up with those dozens of "Big Shots" jokes month after month, and we need YOU to step in and lend a hand. All you gotta do is cut out the "Big Shot" photo below (a photocopy of the page will work fine too) and add your own word balloons, thought balloons, captions and/or sound effects.

And you win stuff too!

Grand Prize (1): One winner, and one winner only, will walk away with a complete set of the Toy Biz ToyFare exclusives to date: Molten Man, Kitty Pryde, Bullseye, Firestar and She-Hulk in her FF costume (previously available only through a Wizard Press subscription offer), the original, rough prototypes of Molten Man and Madrox the Multiple Man (the toy offer from the forthcoming ToyFare #4) and will have their "Big Shot" entry see print in ToyFare #5!

Legal Shots

No purchase necessary. Contest is open to anyone except employees of Wizard Press, their immediate families and whoever writes in with an inappropriately unprintable "Big Shot." You leave the Blob's ass alone! Print your name, date of birth, address, city, state, zip and telephone number with area code on the official entry form or a 3-by-5-inch index card, and attach the form or card to your entry. Enter as many times as you like. Earth-schism syndrome! Mail each entry separately to: Big Shot Contest, c/o Wizard Press, P.O. Box 118, Congers, NY 10920-0118. No mechanical reproductions of completed forms are accepted, but you can photocopy the entry form before filling it out if you don't want to mess up your magazine. All entries become property of Wizard Press and none will be returned. All taxes (federal, state and local, if any) will be the responsibility of the prize winners. No cash equivalent or substitute prizes will be offered. Prizes are awarded in the names of the contest winners and are not transferable. No way can the Blob reach around to wipe himself. Offer void where prohibited, regulated or restricted by law in a manner inconsistent with the purposes and rules hereof. All entries must be received at contest headquarters by September 30, 1997. Wizard Press is not responsible for lost, late, misdirected or mutilated entries. Odds of winning will be determined by the number of valid entries received prior to the closing date of the contest. Prize winners will be selected randomly from among all properly completed entries by Wizard Press. Winning entries will be selected on or about October 15, 1997.

HOW MUCH ARE YOUR HIGH-PRICED TOY COLLECTIBLES REALLY WORTH?

You're a millionaire.

At least that's what about half a dozen toy price guides will tell you. That your toy collection, sitting pristine and "mint" all in its original packaging, showing not a hint of a crease, tear or any sticky price-tag residue, is worth a fortune. The recently released Luke Skywalker Jedi Knight "Return of the Jedi: The Special Edition" Commemorative Exclusive? $200. The Mego Green Goblin? $600. Heck, some stuffed-animal Beanie Baby things can fetch upward of $1,000. That's some serious dough. I mean, $1,000 for a toy? You could buy a new wardrobe, put a down payment on a car or feed a Middle Eastern family of five for a month. Can a toy, regardless of any "Limited Edition" or "Collectible" moniker attached to it, truly be worth what some price guides say they are?

That's what ToyFare wanted to find out. So, knowing there's nothing I won't do for a buck, the ToyFare crew loaded me up with action figures and sent me out into the real world to see if these toys were worth the price tags attached to 'em. Enlisting the aid of ace photographer Heather Ray and once again checking my self-respect at the door, I was off to see if these toys could ever replace good ol' hard cash.

EPISODE 1: "Mego Spidey vs. Zach Malamute"

I thought I'd start small. My first target: Zach Malamute, America's favorite malamute four years running, monthly ToyFare letter-answerer and full-time freeloader at my house. Zach developed a taste for Mego Spider-Man dolls in the last feature I wrote for ToyFare ["The Ultimate Action Figure Stress Test," ToyFare 1996 Special], but would he be willing to trade his favorite chew-toy, a 2-foot rawhide bone that hasn't left his side for over a year, for an only recently opened Mego Spidey?

In about a second.

I'm not sure what it is, but there's something about Spidey's chewy li'l plastic body that whips Zach into a mildly frightening canine frenzy. With Spidey quickly becoming an unrecognizable pulpy mass and his bone lying forgotten in the grass, this experiment seems to be off to a promising start.

EPISODE 2: "Brother Can You Spare a Mars Attacks Martian Spy Girl With Firing Freeze Ray Blaster and Translated Evil Martian Sounds?"

You can call me lazy. You can call me fat. Heck, you can call me fat and lazy. What I'm getting at is that when I try to park downtown I am either too lazy or too broke to feed the parking meter. This is unfortunate. St. Paul, Minn., for instance, has a particularly efficient staff of parking meter cops. Cruising around town in their trusty, tiny cop-carts, they dispense parking justice with an aim that is straight and true. Now, despite this knowledge, I figured if these vanguards of truth were anything at all like you and me they would gladly accept an excellent Mars Attacks action figure in exchange for the 25 centavos I was expected to drop in the meter.

Well, despite taping both a Mars Attacks Martian Spy Girl and a finely crafted sign to the parking meter, I was doomed to fail miserably.

The note, in so many words, identified me as a member of the tired, the poor, the huddled masses yearning to park free. Besides, as an added incentive for leniency, I stuck Zach in the passenger seat, telling him to "look hungry." I thought for sure this would guarantee me a tiny little bit of parking meter permissiveness.

Wrong.

Returning to my car after a 20-minute icy cold beverage break, we find that not only has Zach run off, but I also have a parking ticket stuck under my wiper blades. The moral of this little vignette? Always keep your dog on a leash and never forget: St. Paul meter cops are as incorruptible as Canadian Mounties.

I grab the Martian chick and head off to Episode 3.

EPISODE 3: "Irate Mothers"

Kids are fairly gullible. Let's see whether or not one will trade me his bike for a hunk of plastic in the shape of Spawn bad guy Malebolgia (pronounced "mah-wah-bolzh-a-wah").

Anyway, after driving around a bit we come across 15 of the little devils riding their bikes, screaming and shouting at each other, as kids are apt to do.

"Hey...who wants toys?" got me the attention of the lifi tikes, as well as half a dozen mothers who began watching me cautiously.

"So...who wants to trade a really, really cool toy for their bike?" I asked with an honest, used-car salesman look on my face.

All of the kids, including those who were currently afoot, answered yes. After choosing the coolest BMX bike and some haggling and wrangling with its owner (whom we'll call "Mike"), a deal was struck and I found myself the proud owner of a new ride. Meanwhile, I left a mildly confused youngster in my wake trying to undo the 140 twist-ties holding Malebolgia in his box.

Then, as if from nowhere...The Mother. Crap.

"You are not taking my son's bicycle," she said, lighting up a cigarette.

"Y'know, the Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health," I said, smiling.

She said nothing.

"Well, we did make a deal," I said nervously.

"I'm calling the police," she said, clamping her ear-twisting fingers on the handlebars.

So Mikey got his bike back and, so as not to press my luck, a free Malebolgia.

EPISODE 4: "Gun Shots Rang Out!"

The title of this episode has nothing to do with what really happened. Sounds exciting though, eh?

I don't know about where you live, but in the Twin Cities (Minneapolis and St. Paul, for the geographically challenged) coffee is king. Heck, you can't turn a corner without seeing some kind of hip poseurs sitting at sidewalk tables sipping double-latté-mocha-creamed-frappachinos or something. Kind of makes me nauseous.

Two major side effects have occurred as a result of the coffee boom. First, some guys in Colombia are getting rich peddling legal drugs (caffeine) to the U.S. Second, every Thomas, Richard and Harriet have found a part-time job slinging a cuppa joe like Rachel on "Friends." I decided to see if one of these bean hawkers would trade me an ice-cold glass of caffeinated sornesuch for an excellent French-released Thing figure from Megoo. (As a side note, instead of "The Thing," it's called "La Chosé," which translates to "ex-Air Force pilot who is convinced by his best friend to travel to space in a homemade rocket and returns to Earth a giant rock-covered freak." Neat, huh?)

So I pull into a Java Express (a St. Paul business that takes over old Fotomat booths, bolts some metal to the side, and then sells coffee outta 'em) and begin harassing the guy behind the counter for a free cup o' mud. The weird part is that he almost went for the deal until I told him the Thing was French.

"I don't know," he said decisively. "But it's French," I said, "like croissants and rude waiters who don't use deodorant."

Which, for whatever reason, worked. As I drove off with a free cup o' joe, I left behind one bean-grinder with a crappy orange French Thing doll and tied up our score.

EPISODE 5: "Green C-3PO Makes Pizza Guy See Red... Film at Eleven!"

Having hot food shipped to your house is great. Paying for it, on the other hand, is something I'd rather leave to someone else. In this case, I'll let ToyFare pick up the tab with the toys they sent me. But could I trade some weird green Japanese C-3PO variant figure for a large "San Antonio Chicken" pizza?

After waiting 20 minutes, pizza-boy showed up, handed me my pie and, when I paid him with Threepio, just stood there.

"What is this for?" he asked.

"For playing with," I said, speaking the truth.

"Sorry, man. I can't trade you a pizza for this," he said.

"But it has real Japanese writing on the back, and that makes it worth more than the one with a back that you can read," I said.

"It's $11.30, dude," he said, losing patience.

I gave him the money and, fearing he might spit in the next pie I ordered, tossed in the C-3PO as a tip.

"Gee...thanks," he said, shaking his head as he walked away.

Kinda crappy, yes, but the way I see it, I still got a pizza...and that ain't bad!

EPISODE 6: "Everybody was Kung-Fu Fighting!"

"You should exercise more."

That was the conclusion drawn by the photographic tag team of Heather and her assistant Heidi Eernisse.

"Why?" I asked, finishing off the last slice of Episode 5's pie.

"Maybe you should try to trade a toy for a karate lesson at my karate school," Heather said politely. "That's great exercise."

Taking their hint, it was decided: trade a toy for kung fu...or karate...or whatever the popular chop socky of the moment.

Upon arriving at Karate School, the first instructor we encountered, a "bubbly" little woman named Carrie, was eager to exchange a most decidedly lame Arctic Batman with Polar Armor and Ice Blaster Weapon for a free karate lesson. She said that since her office was crowded, we needed to step outside.

"Do you want to know how much this toy is valued at?" I asked, trying to be helpful.

"No," she said.

"Did you see the last 'Batman' movie?" I asked.

"No," she said.

"Did you know Batman's from Krypton and once tried to eat his sidekick Bucky?" I asked.

"Are you ready?" she said.

"For wha—"

And then my lesson began.

Heather and Heidi told me later I did pretty good; I wasn't unconscious all that long and Carrie really liked the Batman figure. But I ain't buyin' it. She just did the swap to beat up on a fat kid for free. I'm scorin' this one a negative.

EPISODE 7: "...Doobie-Doobie-Doo..."

Jazz, like anchovies, is an acquired taste. Now, figuring I could scam ToyFare out of some more "expenses," we headed over to St. Paul's massive "Midway" neighborhood to Root Cellar Records. I had my eye on an old mint John Coltrane album I hoped the store still had in stock. For those not in the know, Root Cellar is a real record shop, one of the last ones in town. That's right, I mean records. Not these cold, heartless, plastic, computerized compact discs that pass as music today. Real vinyl records. Yummy!

Anyway, helpful clerk "Big" John Ewing knew everything about record albums, but wasn't too keen at first to swap Coltrane for a Warrior Nun Arealia figure. So I thought I'd entice him with her backstory.

"She's like this nun with big boobs who fights evil in a low-cut dress with her big Conan sword," I summarized.

"If you're not going to buy anything, you have to leave," John said.

"Hm. How about swappin' her for some other record in here?" I said.

"Out," he said, pointing toward the street.

Meanwhile, Heather and Heidi were taking the usual slew of pictures.

"Kick him in the ass, John!" they shouted. "It'll make for a cool shot!"

And he did.

Note to self: Take my own pictures next time.

Price guide reality: 2 Reality reality: 5

Storm action figure! Who could resist?

"Trade you this bitchin' X-Men toy for these two slightly rumbled Sgt. Furys, my good man," I offered.

"We don't trade toys here," said the busy clerk.

"But I don't want a toy. I want these comics," I said jovially.

"Next."

"C'mon, it's worth like $20. And it's rare. I think."

"NEXT!"

Once again, I was escorted out of the building (after convincing Heather and Heidi that we didn't need to make this a "cooler picture").

It looks like anybody rooting for the action figure price guide is gonna think this feature a bust. In any event...

EPILOGUE:

After returning to my house and passing Zach, who apparently took a cab home and was gnawing at what was once Mego Spidey, I gave some thought to the final tally of this little exercise. Unless you're a guy trapped in a booth schleppin' coffee or a dog with a taste for Megos, toys don't seem to carry a lot of weight in the real world.

What does it all mean to the entire toy collector's market, all of the toy price guides in print and, heck, reality as toy collectors know it? Let me tell you something, folks, value is a relative thing. I'll give you an example: I've got this absolutely ratty G.I. Joe "Mercury Space Capsule," circa 1967. When I was but a tiny little tyrant, this thing was cool. Heck, astronauts were the coolest guys ever. Y'see, in the halcyon days of the '60s, going into space wasn't considered as routine as it is today and we were all fascinated by it. And I bet my rocket ain't worth a plugged nickel. Joe has lost his shoes. His weird aluminum foil space suit has seen better days. And the really neat glow-in-the-dark instrument panel no longer glows.

But I wouldn't trade you this toy for any number of today's hot collector toys.

What I'm trying to say here is that value, or the beauty of a toy, I guess, can quite often be in the eye of the beholder. If some price guide says your Toy Biz Incredible Hulk is only worth $2.99, what's that mean? If you have a particular attachment to the blasted thing, then its true value could be considered, to use a sappy, overused term, "priceless."

The way I see it, you'll never know what they're worth until you open 'em up and play with 'em.

'Nuff said.

Say goodnight, Zach.

TF

St. Paul-based freelance writer John Seals is still trying to come to terms with the fact that ToyFare gives his dog Zach more work than they give him. Stupid dog.

TOYFARE OFFERS YOU A COMPREHENSIVE TOY DICTIONARY, FROM A TO Z

By the ToyFare staff · Photos by Paul Schiraldi

Being a toy collector is tough.

Especially with all those hieroglyphic-like terms thrown around by buyers, dealers and the crazy mooks who actually make the toys. Mint? Sounds like a flavor. Ball-jointed? Sounds like it's none of our business. Tired of living in the dark, ToyFare uncovered the truths behind all the secretive, insider terms that plague collectors.

A

ABS (Acrylonitrile Butadiene Styrene)—The hard plastic used to make most action figure torsos.

ACCESSORIES—any weapon, stand or snap-on attachments packed with an action figure; adds perceived value to an action figure by making the buyer believe he/she is receiving more for his/her money.

AGE GROUP—the range of ages to which a toy line is targeted and marketed. For example, the target age group for Spawn action figures, based on a mature comic book, is considerably higher than for Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, which is aimed at a children's audience.

ARTICULATION—the way in which an action figure bends or moves its limbs. Traditionally, figures are "articulated" at the arms, legs and neck. Many current figures have waist, knee, elbow, ankle and wrist articulation. Toy Biz's Super-Poseable Spider-Man has tons of articulation, while Galoob's Men in Black figures have limited articulation, substituting action features instead.

ASSORTMENT—denotes how an action figure is shipped to toy stores and the ratio in which toys are packed in cartons. If a line includes four figures and a box holds seven figures, three of the figures may be packed twice in the assortment, while one may be "short packed" in smaller quantities.

B

BALL-JOINT—a ball-in-socket joint that allows 360 degrees of rotation for action figure articulation. Commonly used at arm and leg sockets to allow for a wide variety of poses.

BENDIE—any soft bendable action figure that is poseable through the use of a wire frame covered with soft vinyl. Bendie figures allow for a wider range of articulation than harder plastic figures.

BLISTER CARD—any action figure package utilizing a plastic blister attached to a cardboard card.

BLOW MOLD—a form of action figure production in which compressed air is used in the process to force melted plastic into a mold.

BUTTERFLY—denotes the shape of the hole on blister-carded figures where the cards are hung on hooks in toy stores.

C

CARDED—1) the way in which most action figures are shipped to stores: sealed in a plastic bubble on a cardboard card. 2) any action figure that is still in its original packaging. The figure is assumed to be in mint condition and commands a higher price than figures that are unpackaged.

CASTING—duplication of an original action figure prototype by filling a mold with a hard material, usually urethane (see urethane).

CLAY SCULPTURE—the very first step, after blueprints and control drawings, from which a prototype is created.

CLOSE-OUT—the end of a production run for a line of toys.

CONTROL DRAWINGS—blueprints or designs from which a prototype is sculpted.

CUSTOMIZED—an action figure that has been altered through sanding, and the application of modeling clay or paint to produce another character.

D

DELUXE—denotes any larger-size action figure or one that arrives packaged with extra accessories. It's mostly a buzzword used to make you think you're getting more bang for your buck.

DETACHABLE—any part of an action figure meant to be removable. Mego Thor's helmet is detachable, but a Mego Spidey's head is not...usually.

DIE-CAST—a toy formed from metal parts rather than plastic.

DIORAMA—a miniature three-dimensional scene constructed to give added play value to action figures or create an interesting setting. Could be a cardboard cutout (as in Kenner's Death Star Escape 3-Pack) or an elaborate plastic set (any Todd McFarlane's Monsters playset).

DISKS—circular, coin-shaped hard material used at connection points in a clay sculpture or action figure prototype.

DRY BRUSH—painting technique where a brush loaded with dried paint is applied along high points of a figure's surface.

E

ELECTRONIC—any action feature (light-up or sound) that requires a battery or some sort of electrical power source. Figures with electronic features tend to be bulkier to accommodate the extra mechanisms and wires needed. Just check out the hump on the back of Kenner's Electronic Power F/X Obi-Wan.

DIORAMA

EXCLUSIVES—the bane of all collectors and completists. Many toy store chains, mail-order houses and fan clubs offer one-of-a-kind limited-run action figures. If a particular exclusive is hard to come by, it'll drive a collector bonkers.

F

FAST-FOOD PREMIUMS—any toy included as a premium offer at McDonald's, Burger King, Taco Bell or any other restaurant that uses heat lamps to keep your food toasty warm. Some of these toys command a high price because they were generally perceived as throwaway items when originally released.

FEATURES—any extra actions that make a figure unique. Includes wind-up actions, glow-in-the-dark plastic parts and spring-loaded mechanisms.

G

GRADING—a system of evaluating action figures and toys based on their perceived worth and condition. Grades range from Mint in Mint Package (a perfect figure on a perfect card) to Poor (possibly a damaged figure minus accessories).

GRINDER—a tool used to smooth away flashes and parting lines, the overhanging bits of plastic where the seams of a figure meet.

GUNS—in the case of action figures, any attachable accessory resembling a firearm, laser blaster, bazooka, etc.

H

HOT MELT—a gluing process using heat with a soft plastic to adhere action figure parts together.

I

INJECTION MOLD—a toy-making process in which melted or liquid plastic is injected into a mold to produce an action figure part.

INNER BLISTER—the plastic tray molded to hold the action figure and accessories in position between the card and outer clear plastic of a blister-carded toy.

INTERCHANGEABLE—a system of parts on a toy line which can be mixed and matched; Mego's Micronauts line of the 1970s offered interchangeable parts through which collectors could build variations of their toys a la Lego blocks.

KNOCK-OFF

J

J HOOK—the shape of a hole on packaging where the product is held on a hook for display

JOINTED—a figure with movable parts, as opposed to a static sculpture.

K

KNOCK-OFF—an unauthorized reproduction of a popular, legitimate toy line; usually produced in Third World nations and made from inferior materials to ride the success of another product. Most knock-offs can be found at flea markets or garage sales.

KUNG-FU GRIP—a feature on G.I. Joe dolls introduced in 1974, where the figure's hands were comprised of soft, flexible plastic to allow the grasping of objects.

L

LABEL—1) a warning attached to a blister card or box to suggest a specific age group or denote a hazardous part. 2) an adhesive decal applied to a vehicle or playset to add design decorations.

LED (Light Emitting Diode)—A semiconductor diode that emits light when electrical voltage is applied. Used extensively in light-up toys as a small and safe alternative to large electronics.

LICENSE—an agreement between a movie company or comic publisher that gives a toy manufacturer the rights to make products based on certain properties. The Star Wars license is one of the most coveted in the toy business, while the license for "The Last Starfighter" is one of the lamest, hence no toys.

LIGHT-UP—an action feature which involves electric-powered light effects, as opposed to glow-in-the-dark, non-powered effects.

LOOSE—any toy that is not in its original box or sealed on its original blister card. Usually found en masse in boxes at garage sales and in far less than mint condition.

M

MASTER CARTON—a case of figures shipped to stores from a toy company with proper distribution of short-packed figures, if any.

MEGO—defunct toy manufacturer known for its highly articulated figures of DC and Marvel superheroes (World's Greatest Super-Heroes!). In recent times, the term Mego has been used to describe any oversized figure, albeit incorrectly in some cases.

MINIATURES—smaller toy lines, often based on larger, pre-existing toys.

MINT—an action figure in absolutely flawless condition or one in like-new packaging with no price tag, bent corners or creases.

MISSILE-FIRING—an action feature in which a toy can launch a projectile; often spring-loaded.

MODELS—sculptures purchased either in kit form or preassembled; static and unarticulated, as opposed to true action figures; often called PVCs.

MOLD SHOTS—also referred to as test shots, the first few plastic test action figures from a molding tool; commonly sold as prototypes to die-hard collectors.

MOULDS—a tooling pattern, a reproduction of the original sculpture, used to produce action figures in mass quantities.

N

NON-TOXIC—to be devoid of poisonous qualities. An important feature when producing toys or toy parts children might inadvertently swallow.

O

ONE-UP—refers to the size of a prototype in relation to its production size; meaning two times larger than production size.

OVERSPRAY—a painting technique in which paint is lightly "dusted" over an already existing color. Kenner's Star Wars: Power of the Force Sandtrooper's "sandy" look is achieved through overspray.

P

PACKAGING—the box or blister card which protects a toy from nefarious outside elements, like dust, sunlight or little grubby children who break everything they get their hands on. The condition of a toy's packaging has a direct effect on a toy's value in the secondary market.

PAINT-MASTER—a fully painted and detailed action figure model used as a reference when the toy enters the painting stage of mass production.

PEG HOLE—a hole in the top of toy packaging for use in hanging and displaying on store racks.

PINNED—a form of action figure joint joined on a casting using a metal rod or pin.

PLAY ACTION—the featured active mechanism on a toy, usually simulating the signature "power" of the character on which the toy is based. For example, Toy Biz's Wolverine with Snap-Out Claws replicates the actual character, while Elektra with Light-Up Ninja Blade is a little stretch of the imagination.

PLAYSET—an accessory simulating an environment, often from a movie or animated series, in which action figures can interact.

PROOF-OF-PURCHASE—a symbol or icon on a product's packaging, sometimes a UPC bar code, which can be used to document the purchase of that toy; can often be mailed away, along with shipping costs, to the company producing said product in exchange for a bonus product, either cool (Kenner's 1979 Boba Fett) or lame (Ken-ner's "Spirit of Obi-Wan" Lay's Potato Chips Giveaway).

PROTOTYPE—the initial, original model or sculpt of a toy on which subsequent production is based; prototypes are often larger than the final product, to demonstrate detail.

PULL BACK—a kind of motor within wheeled toys, which can be set in motion by rolling the toy backward (winding up a hidden spring) and releasing.

PVC—a rigid model or statuette composed of polyvinyl chloride; often used as a catch-all phrase describing a statuette for display, as opposed to an articulated action figure.

Q

QUALITY CONTROL (QC)—the process of improving a toy after it is already in production by altering color, sculpting or accessories. Often quality control will result in variants of an action figure; for example, Kenner changed its lightsaber lengths mid-production in its current Star Wars: Power of the Force line, resulting in increased collector demand for figures packaged with the earlier, longer lightsabers.

R

RE-DECO—a change in a paint scheme or sculpting change on an already-produced toy to produce either a variant [such as McFarlane Toys' "Hamburger Head" Spawn in Series I] or a completely new character [as Toy Biz's Rogue became Polaris in its X-Men line].

REPAINT—see re-deco.

RESCULPT—changing some or all of the parts on an pre-existing action figure to create a variant or brand-new character.

ROOTED HAIR—as opposed to molded hair, this feature consists of lifelike hair anchored into a figure through tiny holes in order to achieve a level of realism.

ROTO-CAST—a process in which liquid plastic is shaped to the outside of a mold by centrifugal force from high-speed spinning; a mold for soft, pliable plastics.

ROOTED HAIR

...OIL... CAN...

VAC-METALLIZED

RUNNING CHANGE—variations made during the production run of a toy to correct minor defects or achieve a certain level of quality standard.

S

SEAMS—the area where two individually molded action figure pieces are joined together.

SHIPPING DATE—the scheduled day on which a toy line is shipped to retail outlets for sale.

SHORT-PACKED—an action figure shipped in lower quantities per case than other toys in the same assortment; short-packed figures nearly always command a higher dollar value in the secondary market due to their increased scarcity.

SNAP-ON PIECE—an accessory which fastens to the main action figure by “snapping” it into place.

SOUND CHIP—a digital sound component within a toy which can deliver dialogue or action noises when triggered; as opposed to analog methods [pulling a string to activate a mechanical voice box].

SPRAY MASK—a molded shield cut to a desired shape to be spray-painted.

T

T-CROTCH—a style of joint for an action figure’s crotch area which resembles a T shape as opposed to a V shape; T-crotches traditionally have been used for male characters, while V-crotches have been used for females, except for Playmates’ recent Star Trek line...sissies.

TAMPO-PRINTING—a painting process where color is literally “stamped” onto the surface; used for extra-fine detail, such as word type or a superhero’s emblem.

TEST SHOTS—also known as mold shots; preliminary samples of an action figure.

TEXTURIZE—in action figure sculpting terms, to add detail to a smooth surface.

TRANSFORMING—an action feature which allows the manipulating of a toy’s parts to change it from one form into another. For example, Optimus Prime of Hasbro’s Transformers literally “folded” into a tractor-trailer rig.

TWO-UP—like the One-Up, a prototype’s size in relation to the actual production run; two sizes bigger, or three times the size of the production size.

U

UNDERCOAT—the base coat of paint on a figure, applied before a wash or drybrush.

URETHANE—a hard plastic widely used for tooling patterns.

V

V-CROTCH—a V-shaped style of crotch joint, often used for female characters; (see T-Crotch).

VAC-METALLIZED—a decorative process in which hard plastic is vacuum-formed with silver coating, then painted with a transparent color to add a unique decorative sheen.

VACU-FORM—a process in which plastic is heated and sucked over or into a mold.

VARIANT—a repaint and/or resculpt of an existing action figure, usually produced in limited numbers; variants often command higher prices on the secondary market.

W

WARNING LABEL—a cautionary notice on a toy or its packaging alerting consumers of potential hazards (tiny parts or firing projectiles), notifying parents and consumers of dangers to children.

WASH—a process in which paint is watered down and applied in such a way that it only fills the low points in the surface of an action figure.

WAX—material poured into an action figure mold made from a clay sculpture; used to carve finer details.

WIND-UP—a method of activating an action feature mechanism by turning a knob or wheel; any toy with a winding action feature.

WIPES—a painting process where deco is added in great quantities to highly detailed sculpted pieces, then the excess is literally wiped away; adds color to tiny details, such as wrinkles.

X

X-ACTO BLADE—a brand of steel handle which holds a variety of razor-sharp blades used extensively in the design and customization of toys.

Y

Y—uh, there are no “Y” toy words. Sorry. Move on to “Z.”

Z

ZAP-A-GAP—a clear glue which bonds all types of materials together.

ZIP KICKER—a substance frequently used by action figure customizers which forces the immediate setting of glue; an accelerator. TF

ToyFare follows Hasbro's 12-inch Collector's Series Stormtrooper from start to finish

They're the Emperor's elite, feared across the Known galaxy.

But where do Imperial Stormtroopers really come from? Are they the results of top-secret Imperial cloning experiments or just a bunch of hapless recruits decked out in white armor? If you ask the toy makers at Hasbro New Ventures, they'll tell you all it takes to make one of the Emperor's finest is a hunk of plastic, a bit of stretchy black Spandex and over a year of hard work.

Since the inception of their 12-inch Star Wars Collector's Series last year, the Rhode Island division of Hasbro has produced adaptations of core Star Wars Trilogy characters like Luke Skywalker, Darth Vader and Obi-Wan Kenobi to the delight of toy fans. Now they've finally added the Empire's trusted shock troops to the mix.

The new Stormtrooper figure deftly walks the line between the extremes of the toy-buying public. With an insanely detailed costume (right down to movie-authentic blaster pistol and black bodysuit) as well as the most articulation of any Star Wars 12-inch, it's sure to be an instant hit with both collectors and kids.

But what exactly goes into getting these white-armored baddies, or any other Star Wars character, for that matter, to toy shelves? That's what ToyFare aimed to find out.

STEP 1: REFERENCES

The very first step in making a 12-inch Star Wars figure is deciding what characters to adapt from the endless supply of heroes, villains, creatures and droids in the Star Wars universe. For our purposes, HNV picked a Stormtrooper, the Empire's armored thug. The big job now is getting all the reference material together.

Movie properties like the Star Wars Trilogy are a little different than toys based on comic books or an animated series. Instead of using an artist's rendering of a particular character, Hasbro utilizes the vast wealth of movie-still reference available from Lucasfilm. "We use actual photographs provided by Lucasfilm of the props in the movies," explains Todd Wise, Hasbro's senior design director.

In addition, Lucasfilm is also involved every step of the way to make sure each aspect of the toys adheres to the look and feel of the Star Wars films. "They know the properties so well that they tend to offer information and advice that help us make these figures the best they can be," says Vinnie D'Alleva, director of marketing for Hasbro. "We deal with Julia Russo and Stacey Mollerma at Lucasfilm. They are the queens of detail. All the things that regular Star Wars fans think they know, they know for certain."

Wise adds, "They know the people from the movies so well, I think that Stacey probably knows Harrison Ford's face better than his own wife does."

Hasbro begins by gathering up central art provided by Lucasfilm to use as references.

By Tom Palmer Jr.

STEP 2: BASIC BODY TYPE

Underneath all the armor, the Stormtrooper is based on a generic action body (think HNV's 12-inch G.I. Joe or Action Man) that Hasbro changes around depending on the character.

The Stormtrooper's body has a hollow chest and solid vinyl limbs, while the whole figure is articulated by swivel joints. "There's no wire frame inside, so we can get a little more specific articulation," Wise says.

That clicking noise you hear whenever you move a Stormtrooper's knee? That's actually a tiny gear/washer that helps the leg hold its position. "Little micro-sized teeth on the washer rub against a slot on the inside, allowing the knee to detent as it moves about," Wise explains. "Once it locks into place, you can get a very accurate pose."

For the Stormtrooper, the normal, flesh-colored hands have been completely redone. "We molded the hands specifically for this figure and they're dedicated to the Stormtrooper. They're made in such a way that they can pivot and hold weapons," Wise explains.

Additionally, the hands are also cast in black plastic and are molded with a piece of armor on the back of the hand for authenticity. Other parts of the body are painted black to cover up in case any flesh shows under the armor. "We paint enough of an area so if some of the black fabric is pulled down, you'll still see black there," says D'Alleva, a stickler for detail.

But if you get right down to it, the skull-faced helmet is what gives the Stormtrooper his distinctive look, thus Hasbro New Ventures worked through a number of versions to get it just right. The first test sculpt, which was done in wax, turned out a little too long and skinny. "It was based off of a couple of different Star Wars magazines, but when we went to present it to Lucasfilm we were able to get more reference and make corrections to it," D'Alleva says. "There is a definite way to do the Stormtrooper head, but if you're looking at comic books or other drawn interpretations as reference, it tends to look kind of different."

Ever see a half-naked Stormtrooper? Who'd want to? That's why each figure is covered with a skintight black bodysuit. "The fabric is great because it's very high quality and very durable, yet very easy to work with," Wise says. As Wise reveals, depending on the character, Hasbro will use different materials to make costumes just like the movies. Admiral Ackbar gets a vinyl belt and insignia, for example, while Boba Fett wears a canvas-like cape. Stormtroopers just happen to be tailor-made for aerobics.

STEP 3: SUITING UP

The biggest problem Hasbro ran into while making a Stormtrooper? That would be the trademarked white armor, which we all know ain't worth crap in a blaster fight. "Originally, we were going to rotationally mold the armor to give it a unique seamless look," Wise reveals. "We ended up walking away from the process when the pieces shrank and lost some detail. Also, the rotational mold process is just a little bit longer and slower, so it was a capacity issue as well. With the volumes [of figures] that we would be required to meet for retailer demand, we could never make as many of them as fast as we needed to."

To solve that dilemma, Hasbro decided to use injection molding. Each section of armor is really made of two pieces that are joined by sonic sealing, a method that uses high-frequency vibrations instead of glue. "It vibrates so fast and at such a high frequency that the edge where the pieces are joined actually melts," D'Alleva explains. "When it dries, the pieces seal together and it's a very tough connection. It's one of the cleanest ways of connecting pieces because there's no glue and the seam is very thin."

This unique solution, according to Wise, produced pieces that were thin and just plain looked better. "We didn't sacrifice any detail and we sped up the process. It also made the armor a little less bulky, allowing us to capture the way the suits look in the movie."

Once the armor fits over the bodysuit, the problem is keeping all the pieces in place. You can't strike fear into the hearts of Rebel soldiers when your thigh plate is hanging around your ankles. The boots were glued on and the chest plate and trunks snapped together, and Wise and the rest of the design team came up with a way to fasten the other pieces to the black bodysuit.

STEP 4: MANUFACTURING

Two-thirds of the process in making a 12-inch figure is taken up with the actual manufacturing. Once a prototype is assembled by Hasbro New Ventures and approved by Lucasfilm, patterns are made for each piece and sent to Asia for assembly-line production.

"There's a continual flow of information and communication coming from Asia on a daily basis to give us updates on the figures," Wise says. Updates and specific reviews of figures are sent to Hasbro for approval, and the company must sign off on each step.

One of the strangest parts of this process involves the test shots that come back from Asia.

"Whatever color of plastic or fabric they happen to be running on the main line, that's what they'll use for the test pieces," Wise explains. "We have some pretty wild combinations. The Stormtrooper came back with black and gray pieces, but we also have Greedo in a bright yellow suit and Admiral Ackbar in a hot pink outfit."

A good deal of the manufacturing time is devoted to the Hasbro standards, a series of stringent safety and quality tests to make sure the figures look their best when they hit the shelves. An additional month to six weeks is taken up by testing figure articulation over and over again and kicking boxes around. "We do transit tests where we imitate what it's like to actually ship the toy in its box," Wise says. "We drop it on the floor, bounce it around a little. We try to replicate as best we can what shipping will be like and then we pull the figure out and make sure it's still in one piece."

Lucasfilm, widely known for its careful attention to Star Wars minutiae, is also figured into the manufacturing and quality control process. "We have multiple reviews with Lucasfilm to avoid any errors," Wise explains. "They see it along the way and they directly benefit, as we do, from the fact that the product comes out more authentic to the movies."

STEP 5: PACKAGE DESIGN

While the Stormtrooper is being developed and manufactured, its nifty collector's gatefold box is in the midst of production.

Once a working action figure prototype is made, it is given to the packaging design team to construct the window box that will hold the figure and all accessories.

Aside from making sure the figure will fit into the box, the packaging team has to track down the perfect photos to slap on the packages. Lucasfilm helps out with this job, but sometimes it takes a little bit of creative embellishing to make everything look spiffy.

The Han Solo and Luke Skywalker in Stormtrooper Disguise

Art Director Wayne Blatchley shows off the results of the design team's hard work: The Han & Luke as Stormtrooper Two-Pack.

Two-Pack is a good example of what the packaging team has to go through. There's virtually no full-body photos of Han in the

Stormtrooper outfit with his helmet off, so one had to be pieced together. "We took a normal photo of Han Solo, the neck from Luke Skywalker and the body of a normal Stormtrooper and photo-composited them," Art

Director Wayne Blatchley recalls. "The biggest challenge was finding a picture of Solo that matched the position of the body. We went back and forth five or six times before we got it just right."

When the package is finalized, it is mass-produced to meet up with the completed figures as they roll off the assembly line in Asia. Then the whole shebang gets shipped back to the United States by boat (unfortunately, sans hyperdrive), where the figures are shipped to various retailers.

Top: Hasbro's Stormtrooper from start to finish.

Bottom: It takes a lot of raw materials to put together a Stormtrooper.

STEP 6: SHIPPING

Even as the figures leave the hands of Hasbro New Ventures and are shipped to stores, the company's job doesn't end.

One of the company's key practices is to track the popularity of certain figures, making sure all characters are available to the buying public.

Hasbro also closely monitors exactly how the figures are displayed on toy store shelves. "Transit tests do a lot for us to make sure the product arrives safely, but we also have a retail merchandising organization whose job it is to make sure that the shelves are stocked properly and the figures look good," D'Alleva says.

After a lot of hard work and a few inventive problem-solving techniques, the Stormtroopers are ready to invade toy stores and the Hasbro design team can finally step back and admire what they've accomplished.

"Although the Stormtrooper has been one of the more complicated figures we've done, it's part of one of the most enjoyable product lines and concepts that we've ever worked on," D'Alleva says. "We look forward to developing many, many more Star Wars characters and adding new levels of action and detail to all the figures."

Now, if they'd just get around to making Princess Leia in that kinky metal bikini.... TF

ToyFare Assistant Editor Tom Palmer Jr. considered wearing a black bodysuit to work until he realized it was a little too revealing.

Special Forces

Who would you like to see get the 12-inch treatment?

Already, Hasbro New Ventures is hard at work producing big and tall versions of such Star Wars Trilogy mainstays as the AT-AT Driver, Grand Moff Tarkin, the full cantina band and even Bib Fortuna. In '98, the list of bad guys will be joined by the Sandtrooper (with a white shoulder pad and mini-probe droid to distinguish him from August's exclusive orange-padded Sandtrooper), one of those skirt-wearin' Imperial Snowtroopers and the possibility of some other Imperial forces (you do the math) as exclusives.

Vinnie D'Alleva, Hasbro's director of marketing, spills the beans for Star Wars in '98.

What does the rest of next year look like for Star Wars 12-inchers? How about new versions of some of the characters in the initial assortments? "We're going to be bringing back some of the core characters that we've already done with some new mechanisms and new sculpts," D'Alleva says. "This is more than just new costumes. We're going back and adding articulation and we're looking at making some new expressions for their faces."

Just because HNV is revisiting some of the Trilogy mainstays doesn't mean that the company's running out of characters to adapt into toys. "The thing about 12-inch figures is that we can't do every single character because they're pretty high price points and we really have to focus on the most popular ones," D'Alleva explains.

D'Alleva hints that further down the road, there's a possibility we could see characters from other sides of the Star Wars universe, like the tons of novels and comic books that have been published. "We haven't exhausted the films yet, but at some point, characters from other sources like the novels might be on a list that shows they're more popular than some of the really obscure characters in the movies." ■/TF

THE WORLD'S GREATEST MEGO FAN GIVES YOU THE SCOOP ON THE COOLEST ACTION FIGURES
OF ALL TIME By Andrew Kardon

In the 1970s, Dr. Strange modeled Jordache jeans. Lex Luthor fought Muhammad Ali. And Daredevil was defeated by... parents. No, this isn't some sort of What If...? imaginary story or even an Earth-2 tale. It's the wonderfully wacky world of Mego. Toy Kings Supreme of the '70s. Pioneers of the toy industry, Mego Corp. capitalized on licensing characters from "Star Trek," "Planet of the Apes" and, most successfully, Marvel and DC Comic superheroes, by introducing 8-inch dolls into a 12-inch toy market. Beautifully sculpted and super-articulated, Mego action figures not only came with nifty accessories—like Thor's hammer Mjolnir or Captain America's indestructible shield—but also included interchangeable costumes. Arguably considered the greatest action figures ever made, Megos ruled the toy industry in the '70s but unfortunately faded into obscurity by the early '80s as kids and collectors were turned on to the booming "Star Wars" craze dominated by 3 3/4-inch action figures. And that spelled the end of Mego-mania.

Recently, however, Megos have seen a lot of interest in the collector's market, as a nostalgic Mego generation is now willing (and able!) to pay some big bucks for a chance to own that Captain Kirk doll once again. But with Mego out of business for years, collectors have had to resort to garage sales, flea markets and toy shows to get their figures and information on the defunct company.

That is, until a 32-year-old Huntington, N.Y., resident joined up with Schiffer Publishing to release his book "Mego Action Figure Toys" in 1996. John Bonavita—real estate agent by day, Mego fanatic by night—boasts what could be the largest Mego collection in the world, as well as an incredible wealth of knowledge on the company and all the toys it produced...and even some it didn't. Owing close to 1,000 Mego action figures and roughly 150 playsets, Bonavita's collection also includes original card art and some unique prototypes. In between selling homes and searching for that Mego Ultraman figure, Bonavita let ToyFare into his home—and more specifically, his toy room—to talk shop.

TOYFARE: How did you first get into collecting Megos?

BONAVITA: In the '70s, things were tight for my family when it came to money. During the holidays, we very rarely got toys—all we got were basically clothes. And there was a time around 1975 when we had this great toy store called Toy Town. I remember going in there with my mom, and they had a tremendous display of Mego figures. We couldn't afford them, but I remember telling her, "Some day I'm gonna own these." [Laughs] In the Christmas of '79, things had gotten better. My mom had gone to a store that was going out of business, and she ended up buying me close to 25 Mego items, because she never forgot. And that was it. From 1979 to today, I've been collecting Mego figures nonstop.

Which Mego dolls were the hardest to find?

The production figures that took me the longest to collect were probably Montgomery Ward's Secret Identity figures. Mego was trying to experiment with the idea of Alter Ego figures—Clark Kent, Peter Parker, Dick Grayson and Bruce Wayne—and it was Montgomery Ward who got the exclusive. Those took me forever to get, and I was only able to find that set about four years ago. I heard about a guy having them in New York City, and I literally had to go through three or four people to get to him. Then I made him an offer he couldn't refuse and paid a lot of money, but it was well worth it.

How about the most difficult non-production figure?

That would have to be the Greatest American Hero prototype. I'd heard about it, knew who had it and kept on working on the fellow for about five years before I finally bought the figure from him. In the early '80s, an ex-Mego employee went to a flea market in Queens, set up a table and sold everything he had concerning Megos. There was a box on the table that actually had the Greatest American Hero prototype in it. The guy who went to visit this fellow's table was not an action-figure collector. His son had liked "The Greatest American Hero" [on television], and he decided to pick up the figure for him, not knowing that it was never produced commercially. He actually bought two of 'em, as well as the one male character Bill [played on TV by Robert Culp]. He paid a dollar each for them, and when he got home, he talked to a friend of his who told him that the toys were never made commercially and were priceless. I paid $1,800 for one of his prototypes, and he still has the other one. I think there were probably less than 10 made. But who knows what else was in that box?

Speaking of un-produced figures, why didn't Mego ever manufacture a Flash or Green Lantern figure for its World's Greatest Super-Heroes line?

Mego was really a licensed company, which means their bread and butter was getting movie or TV show licenses and producing toys devoted to them. The number one question I get from a lot of people is, "How come there's no Flash or Green Lantern or whatever?" Well, all of Mego's action figures were not based on the comics; they were based on the exposure the characters got. And for certain DC Comics heroes, it really came down to the "Super Friends" cartoon. The major reason why those two figures were never made is because they were not big characters on that show until around 1977. And by that time, Mego had started cutting back costs and stopped introducing new figures. But if Mego had gone on for one more year and introduced a new line,

I guarantee they would have been introduced. By 1978, if the World's Greatest Super-Heroes had continued, you would have seen a Green Lantern and a Flash. Green Lantern is actually drawn on the Hall of Justice, the last playset Mego ever produced. That's pretty much proof. When Mego did packaging, it was to promote their own figures. So on almost all of their cards or boxes, you'll see the figures that actually came out.

Another reason why certain figures weren't made, though, is because of the price. Mego had a certain manufacturing price point, where after they added the cost of the head, body, outfit, whatever, if the cost was over that price point they would not make that figure. And that's exactly what happened to Marvel's Dr. Doom. When Mego went into production with Dr. Doom, it would've been a very elaborate figure. Doom was literally only a few cents more than making, say, a Superman figure, but because of that few cents, Mego canceled it.

So they totally scrapped Dr. Doom for a few cents?

Well, once Mego decided to cancel Dr. Doom, being a very cost-conscious company, they took the head and made it into Iron Man. If you take

MEGO-MANIA

NAME John Bonavita

BORN July 22, 1965, in Huntington, N.Y.

JOHN'S TOP 10 FAVORITE MEGOS:

10. Tiger Man

"He's a 12-inch villain from Buck Rogers in the 25th Century that Mego did a really good job on. He came out in 1979, the height of their molding."

that Iron Man figure, you can actually see that it's a cross between Iron Man and Dr. Doom. They got rid of the rivets. Plus, the nose looks like a Dr. Doom nose—you can see where Mego changed it around. And they were going to use some of the pieces from the World's Greatest Super-Knights [as Doom's armor and cloak]. Doom would've been a great figure.

What were some of the weirdest toys Mego ever produced?

Mego came out with a figure called Dr. Kromedome, the Bionic Villain. Kenner had the master toy license for the Six Million Dollar Man toys, but they never produced a villain. And Mego quickly—literally overnight—put this figure into production to cash in on the “Bionic” craze. It's a really stupid figure. He comes with this oversized Q-tip as his weapon. If you take his silver helmet off, he's got a completely bald head. The body is unjointed, other than his knees. He's one of the worst figures Mego ever produced.

One of the strangest figures Mego did, considering where they took it from, is the Mugato from Star Trek, which was a big license for the company. Mego did a really bad job with the Mugato. On the show, it was an all-white, furry ape creature. And here, Mego made the Mugato like a person, using a standard human body and clothes with just a furry white head. He's horrible. Mego did a really good job on their other Star Trek figures, but for some reason they blew it with the Mugato.

Speaking of Star Trek, is it just us or does the Gorn look a lot like a certain wall-crawler's nemesis?

Yes, the Gorn is identical to Spider-Man's foe the Lizard. To save money, Mego just used the same figure and dressed him up as a Klingon. [Laughs]

And what about Enterprise crew members like Chekov and Sulu? Mego made

COLLECTING MEGO

For you toy collectors itchin' to catch Mego-Mania like John Bonavita, the mega-Mego collector provides the following tips to begin finding those obscure Mego heroes of old:

- 1 "Network with other collectors. Once you start networking, you'll find out who collects and sells Mego toys."
- 2 "Go to toy and collectible shows if you're able. You can make all sorts of friends and contacts to help you find what you're looking for."
- 3 "Scan the Internet. By typing in keyword 'Mego' you'll find at least 50 websites alone devoted to Mego toys. Plus, there are even more for Mego lines like World's Greatest Super-Heroes, Planet of the Apes and Micronauts."

9. Dr. Who

"That was exclusive to England, a beautiful figure. I'm a big Dr. Who fan."

8. Nubia

"She's really cool and, I don't want to sound weird, but she's kind of a sexy figure. Mego did a good job on this Wonder Woman figure."

7. The Green Goblin

"Very cool. I even think he blows away the stuff that Toy Biz has done. He's a cool-looking figure, especially for Mego."

practically everyone else from "Star Trek" why not them?

The Star Trek figures were not based on the TV show from the '60s; Mego only did the line when the "Star Trek" animated show came out in 1974, and produced them for the next three years. But 1977 was the end of a lot of cool things like superheroes and Star Trek. If Mego's Trek toys would have gone for another year, you would have seen Chekov and Sulu. They were planning on producing them, and there was a primitive Mego electronic game that came out, whose box had a drawing of Sulu and Chekov, which signaled that the company was looking at those characters, at least. They actually were going to be in the next assortment before the line was canceled.

What other figures were in the works that never made it to the big time?

Mego was supposed to come out with a 12-inch Mr. Fantastic, but it was canceled. No one knows why. He's actually on a couple of the 12-inch packages, but for some reason, he was never issued. I actually have Mego ledgers—sales sheets in which toy stores could order Mego products—and he's actually listed, but crossed off.

Mego was also going to make a Daredevil figure. DD didn't go into production because of the word "devil." This is the '70s, remember; Mego did not want to offend any parents with "scary" or demonic toys. That's a good one, especially compared to what's going on today with McFarlane Toys like Bonebreaker and Violator, which would never have been made back in the '70s.

How about Superman's arch-nemesis, Lex Luthor?

Luthor is the perfect Superman villain, and for some reason, Mego opted not to do a Lex Luthor action figure. On a couple of the playsets—like the Hall of Justice—Lex Luthor is pictured. They planned on making him, but I think the major reason why he wasn't made was that he wasn't too much like a supervillain for them. He was just a bald guy. There actually was an 8-inch figure designed, though. But instead of issuing him, Mego took that Lex Luthor head and just made it bigger to fit its 12-inch body type [and used it as Muhammad Ali's opponent] Lightning Lefty.

What's the story with the Dr. Strange doll?

When the "Dr. Strange" TV movie aired in 1978, Mego got the rights to do figures based on it. When the film didn't get picked up as a new TV series, the figure was shelved. In 1982, Mego had a fashion line called Jordache, based on the jeans. That Dr. Strange head was used on the Jordache male fashion doll, whose box reads, "The high fashion male doll with the look that's all together." [Laughs]. I actually have both the male fashion doll and the model which Mego was planning on issuing as Dr. Strange. It's kind of a rough likeness, not something that would've been sold in the store, but it's Dr. Strange. I got that from this guy who did the package artwork for Mego. But it's so funny when you see the two. Poor, poor Dr. Strange.

And what about the 12-inch Captain America doll? His head's enormous!

If you look at the 12-inch Captain America, his head is attached to the wrong body! Mego had two different 12-inch bodies: a really bulky body and a skinny body. The Captain America head was supposed to be on the bulky body, but Mego screwed up the production and put it on the skinny body instead. So it's oversized. But they never changed it; apparently, no one really cared. [Laughs]

What causes the so-called "Mego Molt," a condition where the paint seems to literally melt off a figure's head?

"Mego Molt" mostly affects the 12-inch figures, the ones produced after 1979. To save money, Mego started using inferior vinyl and dyes in their manufacturing plants. Whatever Mego used in its later paints just did not, on a chemical level, bond very well with the really bad vinyl. When the figure would come off the assembly line, the pigment and face colors would literally start to melt the next day. But Mego didn't care, they still shipped the figures. It basically happens to the 12-inch figures—Star Trek: The Motion Picture, Buck Rogers in the 25th Century and The Black Hole. Plus, it also happens on the 8-inchers made after 1979, the worst one being Ponch from CHiPs.

6. Secret Identity Figures

"All four of them: Bruce Wayne, Dick Grayson, Peter Parker and Clark Kent. They're ultra-rare, and when I found them, it was a miracle."

5. Green Arrow

"They really did a great job with him. I never read a Green Arrow comic, but he's a great-looking figure."

4. Conan the Barbarian

"It's a beautiful figure. It can kick butt."

Do you have any tips on storing or displaying your figures?

The Mego figures themselves can be displayed anywhere. The problem with them, though, is that they don't do well in sunlight or high-moisture areas. A damp basement or an attic that gets very hot in the summer aren't very good places for them. Both extremes will affect the joints—they might become brittle and break. The problem with damp basements is that [the figures and costumes] can get moldy. And this has all happened to me.

Just why were Megos so darn popular?

Mego covered all the bases: superheroes, sci-fi like Planet of the Apes and Star Trek, plus the hottest licensing. And they were the dominant toy maker. If you had gone to Toys R Us in the late '70s, a good 60 percent of the toy aisle would've been devoted to Mego. Mego's prices were very good; no one could compete with them. Excluding G.I. Joe and Captain Action in the 1960s, Megos were really the first true action figures.

They were small—fitting easily into a kid's pocket—completely jointed and cheap. And just because of who Mego had as licenses, kids could have Spider-Man, Superman and Captain Kirk. All those different factors contributed to the company's big success.

Then what happened? Did "Star Wars" truly kill Mego?

Mego was offered the toy license for "Star Wars," but science fiction was dead in the '70s up to that point. The last [sci-fi] hit was probably "Planet of the Apes." Mego even had the rights to do toys based on "Logan's Run." They actually made a couple of thousand dolls, but didn't have a place to store them, so rather than throw them in a dump, they just burned them to get rid of them. With warehouse space being a premium then, Mego did a lot of stuff like that.

When the Star Wars toy license was peddled around, the licensors went to Mego first because they were kings of the hill. Mego thought the film appeared very cheesy—some of the early [movie] stills didn't look that great. So Lucas went to Mattel and Hasbro, and ultimately ended up at Kenner, which was a no-name company. But once the Star Wars figures broke out, they just blew the market away.

When Mego had gone to 8-inch figures, the company killed the 12-inch format because they were able to produce 8-inch figures cheaper and make accessories more cost-effective. And where Mego killed the 12-inch doll, the Star Wars 3 3/4-inch [figures] killed the 8-inch doll. So what Mego had done to its competitors in the early '70s, Kenner did to Mego in the late '70s.

Mego was so mad about Star Wars that it bought the rights to almost every major production after that. Mego put all its money into Buck Rogers, The Black Hole, Star Trek: The Motion Picture and even James Bond ["Moonraker"]. And everything that came out bombed. The company put so much money into the marketing and production of those figures that they never made it back. Everything they tried to do from Micronauts to the Dukes of Hazzard failed. At that point, nothing could help Mego and they finally went out of business.

Mego's 12-inch Cap sported a goofy oversized (and incorrect) head.

3. 12-Inch Magnetic "Fly-Away Action" Batman

"He's a mean-looking Batman, who actually looks like Frank Miller's Batman [from The Dark Knight Returns]."

2. The Greatest American Hero 8-inch Prototype

"First of all, I was a big fan of the show. Second, it's so rare. And believe it or not, other than the Greatest American Hero, no other prototypes have ever popped up."

Number one on my list is a removable-mask Robin, mint in box. You might see three in a lifetime. I'm also looking for more prototypes. I do know that there are Logan's Run figures out there. They weren't all burned. There's a Mego Ultraman Leo figure that came out in the early '70s, which I have people in Japan searching for for me. ## TOY STORY

A LOOK AT ACTION FIGURES FROM YEARS PAST

STAR TREK: THE MOTION PICTURE

MEGO WAS DESPERATE.

Wild with regret at having blown the deal for the biggest toy license of the 20th century—Star Wars—the veteran action figure company of the 1970s prayed that “Star Trek: The Motion Picture” would put the company back on top and give Mego a viable toy license to compete against the juggernaut the Star Wars line would become.

They were wrong.

Although “Star Trek” was canceled by NBC in 1969, the late Gene Roddenberry hadn’t given up on his creation. In 1976, it looked like Roddenberry had found the way to resurrect his beloved show: Paramount Pictures wanted to make a new feature film—“Star Trek: Planet of the Titans.” A year later, however, the film project was canceled. The reasons why are a bit murky, but we’ll give you a hint. Two words: “Star Wars.”

In late 1977, the “Planet of the Titans” script had just reached its final stages. From out of nowhere came “Star Wars,” which mowed down everything in its path. Trek folklore has it that Paramount decided “Star Wars” had satisfied the need for a big science fiction film. No, more than satisfied—it had eliminated it. But Paramount hadn’t entirely given up on “Star Trek.” A few months later, the film company announced it was creating a new television network (an idea predating today’s UPN by about two decades), and the flagship program would be a series called “Star Trek II,” featuring the original cast. Unfortunately, it was only after making this announcement that Paramount started its search for advertisers—a search that would be ultimately unsuccessful, leaving the network plan stalled.

Work continued on “Star Trek II,” however, with contracts being negotiated, sets designed and stories written. One of those stories, “In Thy Image” by Alan Dean Foster, caught the eye of then-Paramount president Michael Eisner [current CEO of Disney].

With its new network dying, Paramount went back to its roots: “In Thy Image” would become “Star Trek: The Motion Picture.”

“ST: TMP” opened Dec. 7, 1979, to horrific reviews. It was the “Waterworld” of its day: Originally budgeted for $8.5 million, but eventually costing a mammoth $45 million, it was the most expensive picture Paramount had ever made. Despite the harsh criticism, “ST: TMP” was a box office success which helped to ensure the future of the “Star Trek” franchise for decades to come.

Just as the release of “Star Wars” had played a pivotal role in the future of “Star Trek,” so too did it forever alter the future of the Mego Corp. In 1977, Fox had approached Mego with the license for “Star Wars”—and Mego had turned it down. Rival Kenner scooped up the license and made millions. Mego went hunting for the Next Big Thing, aggressively throwing money at every science fiction film or TV series with blockbuster potential, including “The Black Hole,” “Buck Rogers in the 25th Century”

By Dallas Middaugh

The first of the endless stream of Trek films, "Star Trek: TMP" gave a damned toy company a stay of execution. NO??

and "Star Trek: The Motion Picture."

Mego produced two separate lines of figures for the film: One 3 3/4-inch action figure assortment (to compete directly with Kenner's Star Wars figures); and one including 12-inch action figures, a surprise considering the company's success with its very popular 8-inch dolls. Series One of the 3 3/4-inchers was released in late 1979 and consisted of the usual suspects: Kirk, Spock, McCoy and Scotty, plus newcomers Decker and Ilia (characters created for the movie). Series Two was released in early 1980 exclusively to European toy buyers (although some figures were available via J.C. Penney mail-order in the U.S.), and featured alien races: an Arcturian, a Rigelian, a Betelgeusian, a Megarite, a Zaranite and a Klingon. With the exception of the Klingon, none of these aliens played a major role in the film.

Also released in 1980 was one series of six 12-inch dolls: Kirk, Spock, Decker, Ilia, a Klingon and an Arcturian. Decker and the Klingon remain the rarest figures in this set. A 12-inch Dr. McCoy was designed, but unfortunately never made it off the drawing board.

A few accessories were also released by Mego: For the 3 3/4-inch figures, only a U.S.S. Enterprise Bridge playset was available. A Vulcan Shuttle prototype (named the Surak) was created, but never manufactured. Also released was a pair of wrist communicators (walkie-talkies). In the foreign market, the Enterprise, a Klingon Cruiser, and a Vulcan Shuttle with Sled (not similar to the Surak) were shipped. As with the 3 3/4-inch aliens, these last three are rarer and more valuable because they weren't available in the U.S.

In retrospect, it's not difficult to see why Mego's movie toys didn't sell well—the dull, plodding film could barely sustain an adult's interest, much less an action figure-collecting kid's. But while Mego went bankrupt just three years later, Paramount and Star Trek have prospered ever since. "Star Trek: The Next Generation" and its spinoff "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine" ignited a new generation's interest in Trek lore, in addition to recapturing folks who enjoyed the series' first run.

Paramount finally was able to successfully launch its network, UPN, in 1995, and the flagship show was, in fact, another new "Star Trek" spinoff—"Star Trek: Voyager." And while the original movie toys sold poorly, Playmates' series of Star Trek figures (which, ironically, includes "Star Trek: The Motion Picture") have been wildly successful. So while collectors may mourn the loss of what many called "The World's Greatest Action Figure Company," Star Trek toys show every sign of staying strong into the next millennium. Playmates releases in the last five years number well over 300 toys—a figure that can easily give Star Wars a run for its money this time around.

How's that for a five-year mission? TF

California-based freelance writer Dallas Middaugh's 12-inch action figure never made it off the drawing board either.

CRAFTING YOUR OWN HOMEMADE ACTION FIGURES

RAW MATERIALS

By Chris Spaseff

Greetings, fellow figure fanatics! It's time to get down to the dirty work of making your custom action figure. By now, you should have all your tools and supplies within easy reach of your well-lit work area. This time we're going to get down to the nitty-gritty of tackling those battered old action figures and giving them a super-makeover.

STEP #1: PASSEL O' PARTS

Locate reference materials (comic books, graphic novels, magazines, etc.) with some good pics of your character(s). Look for good front views, at least one side view and some rear shots in order to cover all the costume and character details.

After you've selected your references, it's time to pick the figure and parts to make your new figure come alive. Look at the character you want to create and try to imagine your figure without capes, gloves, boots and any feature not part of his or her basic body outline. You may want to make a rough sketch. Then pay a visit to your raw material sources [see sidebar, page 62] and find the figures or parts of figures that most closely match the image in your mind. To achieve optimum results, you might have to combine individual arms, legs and torsos from different figures. If possible, the figure you start with should resemble the finished piece as closely as possible, to avoid unnecessary cutting.

Disassembling the figures you'll use makes customizing techniques much easier.

KIDS, BE SURE TO GET PARENTAL CONSENT BEFORE YOU BEGIN!

Ingredients

These are the supplies you'll need for this month's installment. If it's not available at your local hobby or craft store, we've noted another source.

1. X-Acto handle with #11 blades
2. Rotary dremel tool and assorted bits (hobby or tool store)
3. Sandpaper in various grits: 80, 100, 150 (hardware store)
4. Sanding block (home improvement or beauty supply store)
5. Milliput or A/B epoxy
6. Super Sculpey
7. Cyanoacrylate instant glue
8. Accelerator for glue
9. Dental tools
10. Small flat-bladed and Phillips screwdrivers (hardware store)
11. 16-gauge galvanized wire (hardware store)
12. Safety goggles
13. Screws, various sizes (hardware store)
14. Needle-nosed pliers (hardware store)
15. Small hacksaw (hardware store)
16. Toothpicks
17. Small C-clamp (hardware store)
18. Wooden dowels or small wood blocks

To begin, disassemble the figures you'll use. Most figures can be pried apart using a small, flat-bladed screwdriver. NOTE: Some figures are easier than others. For instance, Toy Biz and Playmates toys are a lot easier to pop apart than some McFarlane and Star Wars toys, which is by no means a reflection on the quality of the toys, just different manufacturing processes. If you have trouble prying the figure open, check for screws in the toy's back and remove each with a small screwdriver. If you're still having trouble, carefully (and I mean carefully, students) score the seam lines (cut a shallow groove along the seams) with your X-Acto knife and continue gently prying the seam apart. (The seam lines are where the two halves of the figures are glued together.) Work slowly to avoid damaging the figure, but remember, if you crack or break the piece you can usually repair it with cyanoacrylate glue and/or A/B putty.

STEP #2: TRIMMING

After you have your parts laid out in front of you, dry-fit all the pieces to make sure they fit together properly. Often, the mixed-and-matched arms, legs and heads will not fit into the torso piece you're using. You might have to drill the holes in the torso a little larger or modify the socket piece to accommodate.

Re-working your new pieces to fit together snugly also sometimes requires trimming away extra plastic and glue from the seams. On McFarlane figures, much of the extra plastic can simply be pulled off with some needle-nosed pliers, and the glue cleaned up with your X-Acto knife. Also, you can use a dremel tool to remove the extra plastic, using the drum sander or grinding tip. This will make the job easier and faster. Just remember to wear your safety goggles or glasses and work slowly and carefully. If you grind or carve too much away, or obliterate too much detail, don't worry, you can return with some A/B putty later and smooth out any defects or gouges.

If there are details on the figure you don't want, now's a good time to sand 'em off. Don't worry about how it looks when it's done—you'll be painting over it in due time. Just make it smooth, with the shape you want.

Bisecting limbs through their roundest areas will come in handy when it's time to fill out your extended limb.

STEP #3: LENGTH MATTERS

The rebel spirit of customizing demands you let your imagination run wild. Don't feel as though you're stuck with the figure parts you've selected. For example, you can lengthen the limbs of your custom figure if your artistic whims dictate so.

Lengthening or radically altering any part is usually much easier to do while the figure is still disassembled. If the figure's reassembled, additional care will be needed when carving or using the dremel so you don't mistakenly grind or carve body parts you intend on keeping, such as faces, hands and other harder-to-repair pieces.

If you choose to lengthen your figure's arms or legs, start by picking a fairly round area cross-section of the appendage. For example, cutting the biceps or forearm in half by slicing downward with your X-Acto knife will usually work. On some figures a small backsaw (available at your local hobby shop) will make the job easier and a little bit safer.

The next step is to reconnect the two pieces with a length of wire. Drill a hole (the same diameter as your wire) in each cut surface and try to have these holes line up with each other when the bisected pieces are dry-fitted together. Cut a small length of wire (about 2 inches) and use a small amount of your cyanoacrylate in the hole and on the wire to glue the wire in place. Adding a small spray of accelerator to the mix speeds things along. Be careful not to get any glue in the joints or else your figure will be fixed in that position.

Now dry-fit the other side of your extension and trim the wire so your new, improved limb is the length you desire. Remember to take into consideration the depth of the hole in the extended piece before you cut the wire. When drilling holes near hinge joints, like the elbow or knee, remember not to drill your hole quite as deep—it'll weaken the structure, and we want those joints flexible and strong. Now glue the other end of the wire in place, just as before, and remember to avoid getting glue in the joints unless you want them frozen in place.

STEP #4: PUTTY TIME

After your basic layout's all kosher, it's time to mix up some A/B putty. Cut off equal amounts of your epoxy putty and mix together thoroughly as directed in the manufacturers' instructions. The Milliput or epoxy putty will be one color throughout when you've mixed it properly. If it's not one solid color, keep mixing or the putty may have soft spots and you'll have to apply a second layer. Keeping your hands and tools wet will keep the putty from sticking to them. NOTE: It's possible to use Super Sculpey for this application but it will very likely crack or break off. The epoxy putty, on the other hand, is probably stronger than the plastic the figure is made of and is more useful here.

Apply the putty to your lengthened appendage to fill in the wire skeleton you've created. Using your dental tools, contour and shape the putty to transition the two halves together and make it look like one whole piece. If you have any putty left over, apply it to any defects or gouges you made while carving your figure. Set the pieces aside overnight, or at least six to eight hours until they're fully cured, or hardened.

When the putty is thoroughly hardened, use your 100 grit sandpaper to sand and roughly shape the putty to match the muscle contours and general shape of the piece you've lengthened. Then add finer details with finer grit sandpaper or your sanding blocks.

Replacing socket pieces with screws makes for a better fit, especially when mixing and matching parts.

STEP #5: SCREWING AROUND

I have found it advantageous at times to cut off the socket piece of arms, legs and the head, and use a very short #8, #10 or #12 screw to replace this part—it's easier to control the "give" once the parts are back together. You don't want your arms and legs too loose, or your figure'll never stand up without help.

There's no one length of screw that's best, because of the various configurations and sizes of the corresponding pieces. Some have a very long socket piece while others have a very short or fat socket piece. You might have to go to the local hardware store and compare the various sizes of sheet metal screws to locate the one that'll work best for your application.

To use the screw as a new socket piece, carefully cut off the mushroom-shaped swivel using your X-Acto knife. Using a C-clamp or a vise, hold the piece steady for drilling. Safety first, remember! Power tools are dangerous—make sure you don't end up drilling a hole in your kneecap. Drill a hole for your screw, making sure the hole is exactly in the middle of the former socket. We don't want your figure's head leaning to one side like a punch-drunk boxer! If you're apprehensive about this procedure, drilling the hole before you cut off the piece helps to make sure your hole is in the middle. Just make sure the hole is deep enough so when the socket is removed you'll have a hole for your screw. NOTE: If you drill all the way through the arm or legs, don't worry; you can repair the hole with A/B putty. Put your screw in the hole and tighten it down only enough to let the appendages still rotate. Again, you'll have to dry-fit the pieces several times to make sure you have a good fit.

STEP #6: FINISHING UP

Unless your figure needs major, exhaustive detail and customization with paint and so forth later on, it's time to put your figure back together. Major detailing's always easier when the figure's in pieces, so it never hurts to wait until later.

Otherwise, place the back half of the torso on your work area and set the head, legs and arms in their respective positions.

Now it's time to glue on the front half of the torso. Make sure your torso dry-fits together tightly. Sometimes you'll need to scrape a little more plastic or old glue away with your X-Acto knife or your X-Acto handle with the chisel blade.

Apply a small amount of cyanoacrylate to the back torso, taking care not to glue together any moveable parts. Make sure no glue gets on the joint area; using a toothpick to apply the glue helps. Then, quickly place the front half onto the back half, lining up the seams and applying some pressure to the two halves. A small C-clamp can be used to hold things together while you give your figure a light spray of accelerator.

If your figure needs its torso lengthened, it is far easier to do it now that the figure is in one piece. Repeat the instructions above for limbs, using a back saw to cut the torso in half. Instead of wire, use a small wooden dowel or piece of plastic to extend the torso. You will not need to drill any holes in each half, but remember again to not get glue on any moveable joints. Then cover up the wooden dummy pieces with A/B putty, and carve and sand it to look like one uniform piece.

Now your project's to the point where we can start customizing the figure with gloves, boots, tentacles and other details. Next time, we'll add accessories to your figure, as well as further modifying limbs! TF

Parts is Parts

Some sources to find your raw figure pieces:

COMIC STORES

Lots of comic book stores now have loose figures for sale in various conditions. Naturally, used figures are cheaper than mint figures and can save you some bucks on parts. Also, ask your comic dealer if he or she knows of any customers who might have some old figures lying around. Maybe you can trade some of your custom figures for raw materials.

TOY STORES

Kay-Bee and Toys R Us frequently have new figures at very reduced prices in their clearance bins. Kay-Bee usually has lots of older Toy Biz figures, often three for $10 or less. And if you have to, you can still buy new figures to use—but be sure you know exactly what you need, or customizing can become costly.

GARAGE AND YARD SALES

These are other sources for used figures at rack-bottom prices. I frequently get figures for 50 cents or a dollar by dealing with the proprietor of the sale. Don't be afraid to haggle for your hobby!

FRIENDS

Ask your friends if they have any old figures lying around. This is often the best way to obtain your raw materials, 'cause a good pal will often set you up with some good figures gratis. Make sure to tell them in advance you're going to chop their old toys into bits, though. There's nothing worse than hearing, "Say, do you still have my..." right after you've decimated their old treasured Captain America figure in the name of art.

Though you vill dink I'm pullink your American schwein leg, before each vurld-dominating plan I set into motion, I make it a point to drink a full glass of 1% low-fat-meelk. It has ull der same nutrients as whole meelk, but mitout all der fat. It's just vhut my body needs. Vell, dat undt mein Cosmic Cube, with which I shall bring your false democracy down about your ears undt boil der blood in dat pig Captain America's body undtil his still-beating heart bursts from his heaving che—vell, you get der point.

THE CAT'S MEOW OF FAN-MADE ACTION FIGURES

Tired of not being able to find your favorite superhero or Star Wars characters in toy stores? Then get off your butt and take matters into your own hands. by gum! Customise your own action figures, take photographs of the fruit(s) of your labor and send the pics to ToyFare. If your creation is deemed worthy, you could get a spot right here in this monthly "Homemade Heroes" column. You'll win the respect of your friends, admiration from fellow custom modelers, plus you'll walk away with some way-cool stuff. This month's runners-up take home some groovy Trendmasters Battlestar Galactica swag from the mighty fine folks at Hangar 18: the exclusive "Stealth" Cylon and exclusive "War of the Gods" Starbuck (each limited to just 5,000 pieces). The Grand Prize-winning entry gets one of each, plus the standard Cylon, Starbuck, the Imperious Leader and, just 'cause we think making your own toys is cooler than cool, a prototype of that funky Stealth Cylon!

LIKE WHAT YOU SEE? THINK YOU CAN DO BETTER? SHOW US WHAT YOU GOT WITH YOUR OWN "HOMEMADE HEROES!"

BLUE BEETLE (top)

Warren Owen, Oshawa, Ontario, Canada

Our best guess of where this damn fine Blue Beetle figure (with a spiffy-keen paint job) came from is a Super Powers Flash, but Mr. Owen decided he was too good to write down the ingredients. And to top it off, he didn't leave a phone number! And hey! Where's Booster Gold?

BANTHA (middle)

Jim Heston, Hewitt, Texas

If your Tusken Raider has no means to traverse the sandy wastes of Tatooine, you can be like Jim and make one out of felt, modeling clay and plush fabric. Nice job, Jim!

Hey Kenner, howzabout gettin' on the ball and making some rides for alla our Sand People??!

CHAUFFEUR SPAWN (bottom)

Paul Herwick, Climax, NY

Here's the one Spawn variant you thought you'd never see. Taken from the "Harry Houdini" issues of Spawn (#19 and #20, to be exact), this figure is made from everything but an existing Spawn figure. Paul threw together pieces from a Tales from the Crypt Frankenstein, a Web Racer Spider-Man and a Heads-Up Dorian figure from Kenner's Mask line. Heck, he also glued down some pencil points for the spikes...and he didn't even poke an eye out!

BADGER

Tim Blaze, Garfield, Ohio

Defender of the weak! Champion of the oppressed! Drinker of...beer!!! That's about the only way to describe Mike Baron and Jeff Butler's schizophrenic comic book superhero Badger, crafted here into an action figure by Ohioan Tim Blaze. Tim claims to have used two cases of Point Beer and two chunks of real Wisconsin cheese to make Badger, but our guess is that he really used an Archangel II from Toy Biz (minus the wings).

Mmmm...cheese....

GRAND PRIZE WINNER

THE FLASH, HAWKMAN & AQUAMAN

Troy Younger, Commerce City, Colo.

When asked about his grand-prize winning figures, 32-year-old mechanical drafter Troy Younger nonchalantly explains, "It was a nostalgic thing."

A custom action-figure maker in his spare time for the last three years, Younger claims his first introduction to DC Comics icons the Flash, Hawkman and Aquaman was from their Filiation animated incarnations of the 1960s. "I grew up in a small town in Kansas and I didn't see the comic book versions until we moved to a suburb of Denver. When I finally did, I thought they were kind of weird, actually."

Weird or not, Troy's prize-winning figures were customized from some classic Mego bodies, with heads made from the customizer's best friend, Super Sculpey. Hawkman's fist came from a Mego Lizard, with wings supplied by a Princess of Power winged stallion.

Younger wanted to reproduce the look of the Filiation cartoons as closely as he could, so he gave the heads a distinctive animated look and used flat colors for the costumes. "I made some patterns and sewed them up from a standard cotton jersey. I didn't want the costumes to be shiny. The material stretches like Spandex, but it doesn't have the glare."

Taking a cue from his pal Charlee Flatt (whose work has graced previous issues of ToyFare), Younger says his next task is to try making his own action figure bodies. "I've taken the last few months to practice making a body from scratch," he says. "I've been dependent on existing Mego bodies and they're starting to dry up. It's hard to find them anymore!"

Small wonder...ToyFare goes through Megos like candy at Halloween!

MAKE A LEGIONNAIRE LEGION OF SUPER-HEROES CONTEST

The Legion of Super-Heroes, DC's futuristic team of super-powered teens protecting the galaxy from scumbags, have all the makings of a great toy line: cool heroes, kick-ass villains, neat outfits, futuristic gadgetry, a comic tie-in and about a zillion members with five costumes each. The shame of it all is that there have never, ever, ever been any Legion toys.

Until now. What we want YOU to do is pick up the ball dropped by the toy companies. Grab some toys, scoop up a handful of tools and create your own Legionnaire figure/doll. Whip up a Ferro, Ultra Boy or Shrinking Violet. Be different and create a cosmic baddie like Mordru, Tangleweb or any meanie from the Fatal Five. Heck, be unique and whip up Gates, Sensor or even Tenzil Kem (Matter-Eater Lad to you older fans)!

Remember: Creativity and originality count BIG!

What's in it for you?

GRAND PRIZE (1): The sculptor of the keenest Legion of Super-Heroes toy gets buried under a Legion avalanche consisting of: an original piece of art specifically created for this contest by Legionnaires artist Jeffrey Moy depicting the character(s) crafted for the contest, a complete set of the hardcover Legion of Super-Heroes Archives (Volumes 1-7) and, just 'cause it's so damn cool, the official gold-plated Legion flight ring from DC Comics! Whoohoo!

SECOND PRIZE (4): Each runner-up will receive a set of re-launched Legion of Super-Heroes Universe books signed by the creators (Legion of Super-Heroes #0 signed by writers Tom McCraw and Mark Waid and artists Stuart Immonen and Ron Boyd, plus Legionnaires #0 signed by writers Tom McCraw and Mark Waid and artists Jeffrey Moy and Ron Boyd), the latest hardcover Legion of Super-Heroes Archives (Volume 7) and, just 'cause we're nice, a nifty Legion of Super-Heroes logo T-shirt, ta boot!

Top 10 Hottest Action Figures

BY CONTACTING HUNDREDS OF RETAILERS THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY, TOYFARE KEEPS A CLOSE EYE ON THE COUNTRY'S HOTTEST COLLECTIBLE ACTION FIGURES. AND, WELL, HERE THEY ARE...

JUST...JUST PULL MY FINGER.

I'M SORRY--WHAT?

1. GRAND MOFF TARKIN

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Between this Peter Cushing figure and the McFarlane Monsters Frankenstein playset, you can create all those foot-stomping musical numbers from Hammer Studios' "Frankenstein Must be Destroyed!"—from the light-hearted Dr. Frankenstein/fiancée-of-the-lab-assistant "Let's do it!" scene to the always-entertaining "Let me use this hand drill to gauge a hole in the top of your head and relieve the pressure to your brain" little ditty. That appeal aside, what the Moffster really has going for him is that this is the first action figure ever made of him, which drives them collector-types nuts.

2. GARINDAN

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Super-amazing Star Wars trivia fact No. 1: In "Star Wars," watch the ol' Imperial Snitch here when he's at screen-left talking to the Stormtroopers. As he's rattling out our buddies Han, Luke and the gang, he waves the troopers in the good guys' direction and slaps his snout, making his whole face shake. Aside from that Earth-shaking news, what's fueling Garindan's popularity is the same thing as Tarkin's: this be the first-ever Garindan figure.

3. HARLEY QUINN

(BATMAN: D.U.O. FORCE)

Hands-down the BEST figure in the entire Batman: The Animated Series line (yeah, we know the new figures are officially called Batman: D.U.O. Force, but you know what we mean), Harley is also one of the most-requested figures ever. Which should go to show you; you want a toy bad enough, just keep writing to the toy companies (and us) with your requests. It may take a while (Harley here was on the "we wanna see" list for years), but if you keep it up, the figures'll see production eventually.

4. REBEL FLEET TROOPER

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Who's more effective: the Rebel Trooper here or one of them Red-Shirts from "Star Trek"? While the Red-Shirts aren't as cool, this particular brand of Rebels had their asses handed to them in about the first two seconds of "Star Wars." Maybe six of them survived, and those losers were carted off as prisoners and never seen again. So while we dig the Rebels more, we gotta give it to the Red-Shirts. At least they showed up to die in every episode.

5. FIGRIN D'AN

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Geez, that whole "figures that are the first-ever representation of their fictional counterparts are the hottest thing since topless Gillian Anderson downloads" theme sure is going strong here in the ToyFare Top 10. Sheesh, the top five guys are all first-time figures. Adding to the chickpea-headed Cantina Band member's popularity here is that a) he's one of those annoying toy exclusives; and b) most fans want five of 'em to complete "the band." That and chicks dig musicians.

6. PONDA BABA

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Why this guy doesn't have a removable arm is beyond us. Yeah, it's kinda gruesome, but c'mon, how damn cool would that be! And once you do that action feature, the doors are open to do all sorts of keen stuff! Chest-igniting Greedo! "It's a trap!" eyes-bugging Admiral Ackbar! Flatulent Jabba with fecal-matter speckling action! See? What kid wouldn't have hours of endless fun with those magical action features!

7. WEEQUAY SKIFF GUARD

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

In a universe of tough, he-man, take-no-prisoners names like Darth Vader, the Rancor and Boba Fett, we have...Weequay. "Weequay." Makes you want to slap him, don't it? "Stand aside, ma'am...this looks like a job for...Weequay!" Sissy. No wonder he screamed like a schoolgirl on helium when our boy Luke knocked his wrinkled ass into the Sarlacc Pit. Nice ponytail too. They went out of style three years ago, loser.

8. 4-LOM

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

Super-amazing Star Wars trivia fact No. 2: The numbers and letters in 4-LOM stand for "For Love or Money." Get it? He's like a bounty hunter and he does what he does for...love (which we guess he feels for that bug bounty hunter Zuckuss, his partner in crime) or money (which we guess Zuckuss gives him to...y'know, love him). At this point, let's pause for a moment and note that here in the Top 10, nine of the 10 hottest figures are Kenner Star Wars figures. Any doubt what the most popular boys' toy on Earth is?

9. ADMIRAL ACKBAR

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

You could beat an army of Mon Calamaris (them's the name of the race Ackbar here comes from) with a sharp stick. C'mon, those giant eyes are just asking to be poked with a No. 2 pencil or to have someone squeeze a lemon wedge into one. And do you think these squid guys...y'know, "do it," or do the females lay eggs and have the guys come around later when no one's around and do their thing to the egg? (As a side note, yes, we feel dirty having written that last part there.)

10. DENGAR

(STAR WARS: POWER OF THE FORCE)

If a bounty were on our head, we'd want Dengar to try and collect over Boba Fett, IG-88 or Bossk. Those guys are trouble. Dengar? He's like the fat chicks who work high school cafeterias. Scary, but not imposing. Like, who couldn't outrun his fat ass? And, in a pinch, a quick match to his scabby bandages and he'd go up faster than a hamster doused in kerosene. Bah! Ten bucks says this loser, who was No. 8 on the charts last month and No. 10 this month, won't be anywhere in sight come next month.

Castaway FROM THE ISLAND OF MISFIT TOYS

ZZAXX

HULK: "SMASH AND CRASH" (TOY BIZ)

HIS CRIME: Being a giant Cheese Doodle with feet. Granted, making an action figure representation of a comic book character composed entirely of electricity isn't the easiest thing on Earth. But c'mon, this guy looks like he should be the spokesman for some breakfast cereal with mini-marshmallows in it. And his action feature: You wind him up and he...vibrates. Okay, while it would be fun winding him up and putting him in your pocket, you can't escape the simple truth: this guy bites.

MARKET WATCH

WHAT?!? WHO?!? HE SAID WHAT?!? THAT'S SELLING FOR HOW MUCH?!? WHEN?!?

The Force of July

By Lars Pearson

They're better than sex.

That's what many fans are saying about the new wave of Kenner's Star Wars: Power of the Force action figures that hit toy shelves this past July. You make the call. In any case, the newest POTF offerings, including such characters as Admiral Ackbar and Ponda Baba (Walrusman), have sold out faster'n flapjacks at a church social. Given the "Star Wars" promotional juggernaut of 1997, including the "Special Edition" Trilogy re-release and a gazillion toys, Kenner's action figures are almost guaranteed to be top sellers. Heck, in many comic shops, the latest wave sold for $12-$15 a pop, since many collectors opt to fork over extra bucks rather than go hunting through every toy store from here to Tatooine in order to complete their collections.

But get this: The new POTF line has slowed some on the back market, because since the series' relaunch in July 1995, many of the top characters have been redone many times over, which has stifled some fan interest. In 1995, collectors naturally wanted the new Luke Skywalker figure. But since then, there've been an army of Lukes released, including Luke Skywalker in X-Wing Gear, Luke Skywalker in Dagobah Gear, and so on and so on. There's also a platoon of Han Solos out there, and some fans are starting to feel drowned in a sea of...well...clones.

For that reason, the Star Wars figures trading the hottest fall into two camps:

• Characters that have NEVER been figures before: The latest debut releases include the Rebel Fleet Trooper (buy a dozen!), the "Special Edition" ASP-7 Droid, Imperial Snitch Garindan (Long Snout), and the Death Star's head honcho Grand Moff Tarkin, topping everybody's wish list.

• Promotional exclusive figures: The translucent "Spirit of Obi-Wan" Kenobi figure, a Frito-Lay exclusive, leads the pack here. Kellogg's Han Solo in Stormtrooper Disguise is also much desired, and so is the Cantina Band Member (Figrin D'an) offered by the Official Star Wars Fan Club. Fans are already drooling for the B'omarr Monk, a Kenner Internet exclusive slated for release this month.

FIFTEEN BUCKS?
FIFTEEN BUCKS?!!
SUGGESTED RETAIL
IS $5.99!!!

HOG-WILD FOR HARLEY

Who's the hottest Batman figure right now? Not those armor-buttocked weenies prancing around in that god-awful "Batman and Robin" flick, that's for sure. Those latex fetishists are being kerwhalloped in the mad rush to get Harley Quinn, that wild-but-lovable gal pal of the Joker.

Delayed release and limited shipping helped build demand for the impish Harley, plus the fact that she's just so damn cute. Both comics and cartoon fans have developed a soft spot for this babe, who on "Batman: The Animated Series" breaks hearts (sometimes literally) as the Joker's long-suffering moll. Harley's in some areas'll cost you $15-$20, and this figure's popularity is so high, she's galvanized back-issue sales of Harley's only featured comic book appearance to date, DC Comics' Batman Adventures: Mad Love.

HOW TO USE THE TOYFARE PRICE GUIDE

Harley's not the only Bat-figure going great guns, by the way; her evil friends from Kenner's first Batman Animated Series line are also doing ace business. The reason is simple: You can't find 'em anywhere. Go on. Try. We dare you. These figures were innocently released to coincide with the animated TV series when the toy market wasn't sizzling so much, and not much was expected from the rogues' gallery—y'see, at the time, villains were perceived to be poor performers on toy shelves. Nowadays, most of the Bat-villains (regarded by some as the best crooks in the comic universe) outperform the endless march of Batman variants, with the Penguin figure maxing out at about $90 in some areas. Poison Ivy and the Riddler are big winners, and while Mr. Freeze ("Kill da heroes!") has never been a huge Batman villain, he's made gains due to the "Batman and Robin" movie. Lord knows why.

TRADING POST

• Warrior Nun Areala (Antarctic Press)

A real mixed bag here. Some stores report Areala toys are tougher to sell than clothes from a leprosy hut. But other retailers have sold more Warrior Nun figures than they do Warrior Nun comics (go figure), probably because the Nuns are exclusive to comic shops only, and toy completists are being drawn there. We'll have to wait and see with this one.

• Spawn (McFarlane Toys)

Still scorching hot, much like Spawn-Guy himself. Although the new releases sell well, collectors have gone back to the basics, searching desperately for Series 1 figures, which some distributors are naturally out of. The key Spawn figures, including Violator and the Clown, are doing really well, perhaps due in part to the buzz generated by the upcoming "Spawn" feature film. Although in general, all Spawn variants, from Medieval Spawn to the so-called "Hamburger Head" repaint, a Diamond exclusive, are fan favorites.

ToyFare Price Guide Manager Lars Pearson went out with Harley Quinn once, but she whacked him with a wooden mallet when he got fresh. Saucy boy!

FIRST OFF...

The following 30-add pages feature the Toyfare Price Guide, the most accurate and up-to-date action figure price guide in the known universe. To ensure that it's the most bestest price guide available, we stay in contact with hundreds of retailers throughout the country and regularly send scouts to comic/sci-fi/toy shows to see what the li'l buggers are selling for (and which ones are really selling).

But, even working our fingers to the bone, do keep in mind that a price guide is just that, a GUIDE. Prices most definitely vary depending on local availability and popularity of a figure.

FINDING STUFF...

It's easy, and best of all, you can learn at home. The price guide is arranged alphabetically by toy lines. Listings for figures related to movie series (i.e. "The Empire Strikes Back"), are posted alphabetically under the original movie title ("Star Wars"). When a title has been used several times for different lines, like Star Wars: Power of the Force, we list all lines chronologically.

Skipping articles "A," "An," and "The" at the beginning of a title, alphabetization is word by word, not letter by letter. So, "The Mask" is listed under "Mask," and "The Tick" is listed under "Tick." "Star Trek: Starfleet Academy" comes before "Star Trek: The Next Generation" because we include the article "The" in alphabetizing when it appears as an interior word in the title. Using the one-word-at-a-time approach, all titles starting with the word "Super," including "Super Amigos," are used up before we go on to titles such as "Superman Animated Series." Abbreviations such as "Dr." will be found before titles starting with "Dragon" but after titles starting with "Doctor." Figures with names beginning with numerals—such as "2-1B"—will appear at the top of each listing.

WHY TWO PRICES?

All first-column prices are values for mint figures in mint boxes (MIB). Second-column prices are for loose mint figures (LM).

Of course, there are all sorts of grades in between, and if you're the anal type, we've diagrammed a few of them to help make things a little easier. Keep in mind this is only a guide, and percentages can vary depending on several factors, including age, supply and demand for the various grades, retailer location, local availability of a figure and its current popularity.

Any new figure that has just been released but hasn't been widely traded yet is marked with **.

WHAT'S WHAT...

An annoyingly in-depth look at grading action figures:

MINT (MIB) Packaging: Absolutely perfect. No price tag, no bent corner, no minor crease, no nuthin'. Can fetch up to 125%-150% of MIB value. Figure: A perfect figure with no sign of usage. Must include every packaged accessory, all in perfect condition and working order. Can fetch up to 125%-150% of LM value.

NEAR MINT (NM) Packaging: Just a notch or two below perfect. Tiny flaws may include a small tear or crease. Normally fetches 100% of the MIB value. Figure: Just about perfect. Minor smudge/color flaking. All packaged accessories are present (minor smudge/color flaking acceptable) and in working order.

VERY FINE (VF) Packaging: Several minor tears/creases. Usually 75%-80% of MIB value. Figure: More pronounced smudge/color flaking. All accessories are present with (possible) more pronounced smudges/flaking.

FINE (FN) Packaging: Multiple tears/creases of a more profound nature, possible corners missing/minor writing. Around 40%-50% of MIB value. Figure: Loose joints, heavy smudge/color flaking, may not contain any accessories.

VERY GOOD (VG) Packaging: Major crease/tears, large portions of packaging missing, significant writing/stains. You're looking at 15%-25% of MIB value. Figure: Major discolored areas, "wobbly" body parts, may not contain any accessories.

GOOD (G), FAIR (FR) AND POOR (P) Packaging: Heavily torn/creased/written on to the point of obscurity. Sells for about 5%-10% of the MIB value. Figure: Major discolored areas, excessively loose body parts, portions of figure may be missing (ponytail, capes, etc.), may not contain any accessories.

ToyFare PRICE GUIDE

The toys in this guide are priced as follows: Prices listed on the left are for mint in package (MIP), meaning that the toys have never been removed from their original packaging; items not in any packaging (loose) or missing any of their original accessories carry significantly lower prices listed on the right. A listing marked with a ♦♦ means that particular figure has not been released yet from the manufacturer. In some cases, these figures are canceled, and thus, never released.

Remember, this is only a guide, and prices can vary for a variety of reasons, including local scarcity.

SWIVEL-ARM JOES

G.I. Joe: A Real American Hero (Hasbro)

When Hasbro's 3 3/4-inch G.I. Joe line hit toy stores in 1982, it was an instant hit, even though the figures had a difficult time holding their weapons...which ain't good for America's leading fighting force. The first wave of Joes had arms that could only bend at the elbows, making it difficult to pose them with their respective gear. In the line's second year, Hasbro developed the revolutionary Swivel-Arm Battle Grip (a special mid-upper arm swivel-joint) that allowed each soldier to grasp different weapons in an endless variety of poses. The remaining few stiff-arm figures from the first year were eventually replaced, making them actively sought collectibles by hardcore G.I. Joe fans.

AQUALAD

W.E.S.H. TEEN TITANS (MEG)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Adventure

Comics #260 (May 1955)

ORIGIN: The infant Gorth was #### banished from Atlantis

because he had purple eyes,

which the Atlanteans feared

superstitiously. In his youth,

Gorth was found by Aquaman

and became his sidekick

Aqualad. After befriending a #### number of young

superheroes, he joined #### them as a founding member #### of the Teen Titans. When his #### girlfriend Aqualad died

during DC's "Crisis," Aqualad

retreated from surface activities

and found his way back to Atlantis.

After aging in an alternate dimension

and learning sorcerous powers

(optic force blasts and elemental powers) from

Aquaman's father Aiah,

Aqualad took the name of #### Tempest.

CURRENT STATUS: Look for #### another Tempest mini-series

some time this fall.

BEST STORY: Tempest #1-174.

BIG SHOT

HAN SOLO IN CARBONITE BLOCK & INDIANA JONES

Star Wars P.O.T.F II/Raiders of the Lost Ark (Kenner)

With the success of Kenner's original line of Star Wars figures, you'd think the company would be able to concoct a successful line for George Lucas' and Steven Spielberg's "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Not so. Spotty distribution hurt sales of figures in the Adventures of Indiana Jones line, and the case assortments were completely out of whack. Minor bad guys like Toht and the Cairo Swordsman were all over the place, while main characters like Indiana Jones and Marion Ravenwood were impossible to find. Later, L.J.N. produced a small line of toys for "Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom." But nobody bothered when "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" was released. With a fourth Indy movie rumored to be in the works, could another attempt at Indiana Jones action figures be on the horizon? We'll see.

BROOD
X-MEN (TOY BIZ)
FIRST APPEARANCE: Uncanny X-Men #155 (March 1982)
ORIGIN: The ferocious B-foot-long alien Brood reproduce by impregnating living hosts with their eggs. These insectoid creatures have nests on countless planets throughout the cosmos and traverse space in sentient "space whale" starships. Their razor-sharp teeth, dagger-like appendages and stinger tail make Brood warriors fierce foes in any battle.
CURRENT STATUS: The Brood were last seen in The X-Men vs. The Brood mini-series, where the aliens attempted to hunt down and kill Hannah Cosmos, a human who bonded with a Queen Brood egg.
BEST STORY: X-Men #162. Wolverine struggles to fight off a flaming "Stealthed" host egg that has been implanted within him.

BIG SHOT

LUKE SKYWALKER, HAN SOLO & CAP-2 MINI-RIG Star Wars P.O.F.E. (12-inch Dolls)/Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back (Mini-Rigs) (Kenner)

Way before the current Star Wars: Power of the Force Crowd Control Stormtrooper or Han Solo's Smuggler Flight Pack, Kenner made Mini-Rigs, small one-man vehicles that were some of the first non-movie Star Wars vehicle toys. "The mini-rigs are a whole class among themselves for a series of vehicles that in Kenner's world was just off-camera," according to Star Wars guru Steve Sansweet (author of Star Wars: From Concept to Screen to Collectible). "They still wanted to have the look and feel of the Star Wars universe, but they needed vehicles at a lower price point. You could buy the figure, but if you couldn't afford (or the parents didn't want to spend) 20 bucks for a vehicle, you could get an individual mini-rig for four or five bucks."

CORUSCANT GUARD

STAR WARS: SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: Shadows of the Empire (1995)
ORIGIN: Assigned to the Galactic Imperial Center on the planet Coruscant, these elite Stormtroopers use any means necessary to keep the peace. Their distinctive red and black armor has filters that allow them to operate in polluted atmospheres and hi-tech caminks, so dispersed units are always in contact. Each guard is trained in hand-to-hand combat and is proficient with a tower staff, which can deliver an electric charge in crowd control situations.

CURRENT STATUS: Much of the Star Wars prequel films' storylines take place on Coruscant, so these crimson-crimson guys might hit the big screen in 1999.
BEST STORY: Shadows of the Empire novel, Luke Skywalker and Lando Calrissian disguise themselves as Coruscant Guards at one point.

BIG SHOT

ELECTRONIC F/X BEN KENOBI, DARTH VADER & THE EMPEROR Star Wars P.O.T.F. II/Star Wars: Return of the Jedi (Kenner)

Aside from some nifty glowing lightsabers and beeping noises, the Star Wars Electronic Power FX line features totally resculpted versions of familiar characters like Darth Vader and R2-D2. Obi-Wan here isn't hiding a small midge behind his cape, he's just been resculpted to house the circuitry to make his lightsaber glow. Here's the lowdown on how the whole thing works: Its right hand is outfitted with an LED light that's wired through his hollow arm to a battery and activator button on his back. Press the button and watch his Jedi weapon light up for a few seconds. And don't worry. Once the battery runs out, you can take a screwdriver and open up Obi-Wan's back to replace it. Then maybe you can do something about that hump.

BIG SHOT

TORCH (DREADNOK), DESTRO & COBRA COMMANDERS G.I. Joe: A Real American Hero (Hasbro)

Hasbro offered a ton of mail-in premiums from the outset of its 3 3/4-inch G.I. Joe line. It all started with Cobra Commander in 1982, the first year of the mega-successful line. All you had to do was clip five "Flag Points" (what doubled for proofs-of-purchase) from the back of any figure or vehicle, drop 'em in an envelope with some cash and wait for the silver-mailed manna to show up in your mailbox. The initial offer was a success, so Hasbro continued to offer them throughout the life of the line. Other figures that appeared as mail-in premiums included Major Bludd, Duke, Sgt. Slaughter, the Frigate and a customizable Steel Brigade Trooper, where you could select your own name, patch and file card. Yo Joe!

HUMAN TORCH I & SILVER SURFER

Fantastic Four (Toy Biz)

Back when the "Fantastic Four" animated series was on television, Toy Biz gave the World's Greatest Comic its own toy line. Mr. Fantastic and the Thing were part of the plan, but half of the team wasn't accounted for. What happened? We didn't plan on putting the Human Torch or the Invisible Woman in the first assortment, "Toy Biz Product Manager Jesse Falcon reveals. "We had sculpted them from scratch for the second assortment, and as we got closer and closer to shipping, upper management said that if we're going to call the line the Fantastic Four, we need all four characters in the first assortment. So we took two tools we had for a female body (Spider-Man) and a male body (Silver Surfer) and decorated them like the Invisible Woman and Human Torch."

BIG SHOT

L.T. COMMANDER MONTGOMERY SCOTT & YAK-FACE Star Trek Collector Series (9-Inch) (Playmates)/Star Wars P.O.T.F.I (Kenner)

One of the rarest Star Wars figures from the original Power of the Force line is Yak Face, a Joe Camel wannabe that was one of the last Star Wars figures produced. "The original plan for Yak Face was to make him available as a mail-in premium," reveals Star Wars expert Steve Sansweet. "The demand for Star Wars figures fell off in the U.S. and they decided to not do the promotion and just leave him on card." If you collect carded figures, be aware that there are two versions of Yak Face on card. "Since Return of the Jedi opened later in Europe, they decided to package them on a Tri Logo card (a multilingual package) and offer a small amount on the regular POTF card."

MUG SHOT

PSYCHO MAN

FANTASTIC FOUR (TOY BIZ)
FIRST APPEARANCE: Fantastic Four Annual #5 (November 1967)
ORIGIN: The Psycho Man, a cold and calculating supervillain with the ability to control and induce emotions in others through various devices, is actually a scientist from the Microverse. He set his sights on the conquest of Earth, but when he traveled here, he remained at its arm's size and operated out of a full-sized armored botchery. His nefarious plans have been foiled on numerous occasions by the Fantastic Four.
CURRENT STATUS: When he was last seen, Psycho Man was defeated by the mutant Cable, preventing an all-out war in the Microverse.
BEST STORY: Fantastic Four #280-284. Psycho Man and the android Hate-Monger stir up hate in New York City and transform the Invisible Woman into the nasty villainess Malice.

BIG SHOT

R2-D2S & C-3POS Star Wars/Star Wars P.O.T.F. II (Kenner)

It's tough being a droid in the Star Wars universe. Not only do these little robot buddies get ridiculed and blown apart in every other scene, they don't get to change costumes like everybody else. And when it comes to Star Wars action figures, that's the key to raking in the cash. But even though C-3PO and R2-D2 stood relatively the same throughout the Trilogy, Kenner found a way to make multiple versions in the original line. The droids don't wear clothes so they gave them special gimmicks instead," says Star Wars expert Steve Sansweet. "C-3PO gets blown apart in Empire" and R2 is always full of surprises, so Kenner had a way to freshen the line by adding features to the figures."

SCARECROW

BATMAN ANIMATED SERIES (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Batman: The Animated Series" episode "Nothing to Fear" (Sept. 15, 1992)

CHARACTER: Jonathan Crane, professor of psychology at Gotham State University, was fired when he took his research into fear too far by experimenting on students. Taking the name Scarecrow, Crane menaced Gotham's citizens using chemicals and devices to induce fear and terror.

CURRENT STATUS: The new "Batman and Robin Adventures" animated show on the WB network has a redesigned and scarier Scarecrow.

BEST STORY: "Dreams in Darkness." This episode, one of the best Batman cartoons, has the Dark Knight imprisoned in Arkham Asylum after he himself is infected by the Scarecrow's fear toxin.

BIG SHOT

TWO-FACE, IMPERIAL DIGNITY & EV-9D9 Batman Animated Series/Star Wars: P.O.T.F. I (Kenner)

To spark interest in Star Wars figures in the mid '80s, Kenner came up with special silver Power of the Force coins to freshen up its action figure packages and give collectors an extra collectible for their back. A complete set of them is one of the most prized Star Wars collectibles. "When it became clear that the whole POTF line wasn't going to be made or sold publicly, Kenner offered the whole set of coins through the mail," says Steve Sansweet. "Kenner was getting a lot of demand from collectors, so they got permission to sell a complete set as a public service for $29. They were not permitted to advertise the fact but if anybody called in or wrote in they were able to get a full set for under $30, instead of $2,500 that the set goes for now."

NOT. ONE. MORE. LIEFFELD. JOKE.

FREIGHT & L.T. STONE

G.I. Joe Extreme (Kenner)

Does less articulation signify the end of a toy line? That would seem to be the case for G.I. Joe. In 1994, Hasbro replaced the long-running Red American Hero line with the Joe Kubert-inspired Sgt. Savage and his Screaming Eagles, which was in turn quickly replaced with G.I. Joe Extreme, a line that took away everything G.I. Joe fans had come to know and love. Instead of fighting the evil forces of Cobra Commander, this new assortment of figures took on the forces of S.A.R.G. (Soldiers of Anarchy, Force and Ruin). This new line also eliminated virtually all of the articulation that G.I. Joe was famous for. Figures like Ballistic, Lt. Stone and Iron Klaw were posed in awkward battle stances and came with a bunch of oversized weapons that would give Bob Lieffeld a hernia.

TALOSIAN KEEPER

STAR TREK [PLAYMATES]

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Star Trek" episode "The Menagerie, Part I" (Nov. 17, 1966)

ORIGIN: The residents of the bottle-ravaged planet Talos IV found their mental powers when they were driven underground, where they created telepathic illusory experiences for alien lifeforms imprisoned in their menagerie. The crew of the U.S.S. Enterprise, led by Capt. Christopher Pike, encountered the Talosians when they responded to a ship's distress call from Talos IV and were subsequently captured and spent time under the influence of the Talosians' illusions. CURRENT STATUS: When they were last seen, the reformed Talosians were figuring out a way to reclaim the surface of Talos II.

BEST STORY: "Star Trek: The Menagerie." This landmark two-part episode is available from Paramount home video.

TOHT

JOHN
RAIDERS OF THE LOST ARK (KENNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE: "Raiders of the Lost Ark" (1981)

ORIGIN: The mysterious and ruthless Nazi operative Toht was assigned to locate the headpiece for the Staff of Ra, which would provide the exact location of the fabled Ark of the Covenant, the vessel said to hold the original Ten Commandments. When Toht found his prize in the burning wreckage of the impression left on Toht's hand was enough to provide the Nazis with the valuable information they needed. CURRENT STATUS: Melted to goo by the wrath of God. BEST STORY: "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Look no further than the original Indiana Jones movie for some of Toht's silliest moments.

MUG SHOT

TUSKEN RAIDER

STAR WARS P.B.T. II COLLECTION 2 (KEMNER)

FIRST APPEARANCE "Star Wars" 1977

ORIGIN: The vast deserts of Tatooine are home to the Tusken Raiders, or Sand People, a race of nomads with an aversion to human settlers. To protect themselves from the scorching heat of the planet's twin suns and harsh desert winds, the Raiders cover themselves in strips of cloth and utilize a breathing apparatus and eye filters. Tusken Raiders travel in groups of 20 to 30 arm themselves with the gaderffii stick, a double-edged ax fashioned from scrap metal.

CURRENT STATUS: Portions of the Star Wars prequels might take place on Tatooine, so the Raiders could show up again.

BEST STORY: Next to the film, the Star Wars novelization, which provides insight into the Tusken Raiders' ancestral connection to those 87 Jawas!

CYLONS

Battlestar Galactica (Mattel)/(Trendmasters)

Battlestar Galactica is currently enjoying a massive resurgence in popularity, including the TV show that started it all, as well as both Mattel's original toy line and the new action figures from Trendmasters. In fact, a letter-writing campaign is underway to resurrect the show on the Sci-Fi Channel. If you're a big Battlestar fan, make your voice heard and put pen to paper to bring back one of the most underrated science fiction TV shows. Write to: Mr. Barry Shulman, c/o The Sci-Fi Channel, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10020-1523. Also, you can drop a line to Universal Television, the company that owns Battlestar, at: Mr. Dan Filie, Syndication Department, Universal Television, 100 Universal City Plaza, Universal City, CA 91608.

WARRIOR NUN AREALA
WARRIOR NUN AREALA (ANTARCTIC PRESS)
FIRST APPEARANCE: Warrior Nun Areala (1st series) #1 (December 1994)
ORIGIN: Sister Shannon Masters was an orphan raised by the nuns at St. Bernadette's convent and eventually joined the class of Warrior Nuns, an order sworn to protect the Earth from the forces of Hell. After losing her left arm in battle, Masters had a vision and took the name of the first warrior nun: Areala. In her battle against evil, Areala uses the Clove of Arael, the Sword of Antichrist and the incredibly powerful God Kemo.
CURRENT STATUS: Everybody's favorite fighter' nun can be seen in her own ongoing bimonthly series from Antarctic Press.
BEST STORY: Warrior Nun Areala (1st series) #1-#3. The original limited series reveals all the secrets of the Warrior Nuns.

GENE SIMMONS VS. CONAN

KISS (McFarlane Toys/World's Greatest Super Heroes! (Mego))

Sure, it's kinda odd for KISS drummer Peter Criss to have a drum that fires missiles or for axeman virtuoso Ace Frehley to ride a space sled guitar, but the strangest part of McFarlane Toys' new KISS figures is the rosted hair. What's that mean? Here's how it goes: The head of each KISS figure is sculpted so the scalp is full of small evenly spaced holes. Because of the black and white makeup each KISS member wears, the scalps are painted black to hide most of the holes. A plug of hair is fed through each hole and secured on the inside before the head is attached to the body, giving the figures a unique look that can't be captured in plastic. Too bad Paul Stanley doesn't come with rosted chest hair. Eww...

WARSTAR

X-MEN (TOY BI)

FIRST APPEARANCE: X-Men

#137 (September 1980)

Ability: The green metallic Warstar is a member of the Shi'ar Imperial Guard and is actually two separate beings: if hee and C'cil (pronounced "Beany" and "Dacil"). If hee is the smaller of the pair and can deliver an electric shock, while C'cil carries his partner on his back. Warstar was a member of the Guard, assigned to carry out the personal orders of the ruler of the vast Shi'ar Empire, until he served Lord Saurer, Deathbird and the Brood in their plot to overthrow the Shi'ar Majestrix Lilandra.

CURRENT STATUS: Warstar was last seen battling Captain America as an agent of the Kree.

BEST STORY: X-Men #137. Warstar and the rest of the Imperial Guard battle the X-Men in the legendary "Death of Phoenix" issue.

BEAU SMITH
McFARLANE TOYS' DIRECTOR OF PROMOTIONS

PLAYING WITH DOLLS

In the summer afternoons of 1966 I was playin' Army, eatin' moon pies and drinkin' RC Cola. I had a stack of new comics from the drug store, a big ol' shade tree and time on my hands.

As I was thumbin' through one of the comics, I came across a toy ad that made my heart skip a beat. It wasn't just an ad for any new toy. It was THE toy: Captain Action, a 12-inch action figure that you could change into every superhero or tough guy that ever whupped up on evil. He could be Captain America! Batman! Sgt. Fury! Flash Gordon! Aquaman! Even the Phantom! I had to have one.

It was the best $4.98 I ever extorted out of my parents. I opened that box and there he was, with jet-black hair and cool costume, a hat like Blackhawk's, a ray gun and a killer sword. But the best part was his smartass smirk, as if he'd backhand G.I. Joe and take his lunch money. Where Joe had the build of a barroom brawler, Captain Action was the poster boy for steroids. His muscles had muscles, with forearms rivaling Popeye's.

I was drunk with power.

I spent hours upon hours playing with Captain Action. I teamed him with G.I. Joe and cowboy Johnny West to fight the combined might of the Russians, Nazis and wild Indians. My whacked-out world of toys was not a place for those who played timid. It was the neighborhood of which Ken and Barbie lived in fear.

That fall I entered junior high school and discovered girls, ball practice and other lurid concepts too graphic for this publication. In one year's time, I changed. I was through with toys. I was busy doin' "cool" things. And the following year began the Summer of Darkness, the time when evil knocked on my door and I let it in.

With my two younger brothers, Mitch and Gig, I took all my Joes to the second-story bedroom window. There we tied firecrackers to 'em. Would the Joes just explode or drown in the swimming pool below? Oh, the evil. I think of my Russian Joe splintering into a million pieces in mid-air. I remember all my car models melting in one awful pile of charred plastic with the smell of lighter fluid filling the humid summer air.

Captain Action was one of the last toys to be thrown into our meat grinder of mayhem. We buried the Captain neck-deep in a hole, with a series of long-fused cherry bombs peeking just above the ground. With an evil smile, I watched as the fuses went off in unison and the ground erupted into the air...along with the head of Captain Action. That dark day I became the Charles Manson of the toy world.

Many years later I would look back on the Summer of Darkness with heavy regret. I cursed myself. How could I have destroyed so many happy memories in one afternoon of madness?

To that end I have tried to make amends for my evil deeds, going out on the net to recruit more old-time G.I. Joes back into my personal army, this time treating them as the national treasures they truly are. I have over 40 in my new army and they're very happy in their new home.

Last year I was lucky enough to locate a Captain Action to replace the one lost in the toy holocaust. I didn't deserve him, but the man running the Big Toy Box in the Sky must have seen that I was sincere in repenting my crimes. The Captain Action I have now is a mint 12 inches of heroic glory. His joints are as sturdy as they were in 1966. I even have the Sgt. Fury outfit I always lusted after. I treat him like the true king of toys he is. I'm even thinkin' about buyin' him a couple Barbie concubines to make up for the rough treatment I gave his relative so many summers ago.

The lesson to be learned here is to be good to your toys. You never know when they might come to life while you're sleeping and slit your throat with an action sword. Lord knows you might deserve it.

My name is Beau Smith. I am a former abuser of toys.
